One of the main arguments in favour of the corporation tax in 1965 was that Britain was the only country out of step, and that the old system was a Puffing Billy in an age of Beechings. Dr Heining points out that in national and international tax discussions for many years it has been acknowledged that consecutive taxation on company profits and company dividends was justified neither from the point of fiscal law nor of economic policy. The income to be taxed flowed from one source only, the corporation, the operation of dividend-payment being merely one of distribution.

The words of the dissent written by Dr Kaldor in 1955 in the Final Report of the Royal Commission on Taxation said that this view rested on a misconception. Once we recognize, said Dr Kaldor, that the profits tax paid by companies is a different tax from the income tax paid by individuals, the principles of equity no more require us to offset the profits tax against the individual's income tax than to call for a tax credit for local rates, petrol duty or stamp duty. Dr Kaldor's argument amounted to little more than a cloud of words to cover up false analogies.

Dr Heining points out that the need to mitigate or avoid double taxation was not the argument which induced the German Government to pass the splitrate legislation. The Government was more interested in creating an efficient capital market and in making equity issues as attractive to companies as bond issues.

The view was taken in Germany that a free and effective capital market, with companies raising their new issue requirements through the market, would be the best guarantee that investments with the best profit prospects would find most favour with investors. Thus the most efficient companies would find favour and growth companies would attract all the capital they needed.

The split-rate tax system enabled companies to distribute a substantial proportion of dividends without substantial tax penalty. The Government wished to encourage as wide a spectrum of shareholders as possible, and generous dividends would do a great deal to attract a wide circle of savers.

The German system was also meant to be neutral between partnerships and companies, and to prevent any specific form of business organization being favoured by the tax structure. The present British system is biased against the corporate form for small businesses, and it is doubtful whether this result is either fair or desirable.

While the British Chancellor was planning the tax changes which resulted in the 1965 Act, the French Government's fiscal advisers were in London examining the British system to see if it offered any benefits to them. They went back with a recommendation that the French Government should go over, at least in part, to the British pre-1965 system and give shareholders a credit (avoir fiscal) for company tax against their individual liabilities.

The French chose the old British system after having studied the German split-rate scheme. Whether they were right or wrong remains to be seen, but sooner or later, in harmonizing direct taxation, the European Economic Community will have to recommend either the German system or an even more liberalized French system.

It is ironic that when Britain enters the Common Market she will have to go over to the German system or the French system. If it is the latter (and the French seem to have the edge on the other Common Market countries in getting their own tax systems made the pattern for E.E.C.) which wins out, we shall have the side-splitting spectacle of the British Revenue visiting their continental colleagues who will be accompanied by the grinning ghosts of PITT and ADDINGTON, the authors of the integrated income tax. The result may be that Britain will have to adopt a continental corporation tax originally made in England.

Current Affairs

Caution – Tax Time Limits Ahead

THE approaching end of the fiscal year also marks the onset of a decline in the level of certain transitional taxation reliefs. Section 87 of the Finance Act 1965 relates to cases where a company ceases to possess a source of income and if this happens after April 5th, 1968, the relief begins to taper off with a 25 per cent reduction. Assistance to water companies under section 86 is reduced by 75 per cent.

Under the rules which ante-dated group relief, a subvention payment in aid of an associated company's deficit must be made before April 6th, 1968, as regards accounting periods ending in 1965-66. For individuals and partnerships, losses of a trade or capital allowances primarily available against certain types of income can only be relieved against general income for 1965–66 on a claim being made before the end of 1967–68, although for companies the two-year period of claim runs from the end of their accounting period. This is significant for those who make up their accounts to March 31st and that date is also relevant for tardy income tax or surtax payers as regards a possible liability for interest where amounts due on January 1st, 1968, have remained unpaid.

For property-owners, the right to have income from the letting of furniture integrated with Case VIII assessments lapses after April 5th, 1968, as regards the year 1965–66, but there is a stricter one-year time limit where it is desired to have instalments of a premium treated as rent (sections 15 (4) and 22 (6), Finance Act 1962) Companies should be on the alert to ensure that any applications to the Board of Inland Revenue under section 83 (11), in respect of excess dividends paid in 1965–66, are submitted before April 6th, 1968, and also that elections under section 81 (4) of the Finance Act 1965 are made in the curious case where it is not advantageous to exclude from profits tax that part of the results within the scope of corporation tax.

Company Reconstruction and Carry-forward Relief

THE successful efforts of cotton-spinning companies to avoid income tax by reconstructing themselves and thus creating an artificial cessation, led the Government of the day to pass section 17 of the Finance Act 1954 under which, broadly speaking, the 'cessation' provisions were not applied. However, this section has probably been much more of a boon to the taxpayer than to the Inland Revenue, and consequently there is now a tendency for the Revenue to resist the application of section 17 on highly technical grounds.

On March 6th, two cases were decided in the High Court on this section, one in favour of the Revenue and one in favour of the taxpayer. Both cases turned on the meaning of 'beneficial ownership' in section 17 (6) (a).

In Wood Preservation Ltd v. Prior, three-quarters of the issued capital of the appellant company was owned by Silexine Paints Ltd who transferred part of its own trade to the appellant company. In its accounting period to May 9th, 1960, Silexine incurred a loss in the part trade and the appellant company sought relief by carrying forward that loss against its own profits under section 342 of the Income Tax Act 1952 as extended by section 17 of the Finance Act 1954.

However, in March 1960, Silexine had agreed to sell the issued capital of the appellant company to British Ratin Ltd, subject to certain conditions imposed by the latter company. One of the conditions (which was wholly in favour of British Ratin) was not satisfied,

President's Dinner

THE President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., and the members of the Council of the Institute, entertained a number of distinguished guests at a dinner held on Wednesday of last week in the Hall of The Drapers' Company, London EC2.

but British Ratin could waive it. Accordingly, it was held that British Ratin could enforce specific performance in which case Silexine had ceased to 'own' the shares in the appellant company for the purposes of section 17. Therefore the relief was not allowable and the Court dismissed the company's appeal.

In Blower v. Langworthy Bros (Drills) Ltd the company was formed to take over the business of an existing company and it commenced to trade on October 14th, 1963. To obtain loss carry-forward relief it had to show that its shares were owned by the existing company at some time after that date. The existing company had, however, already entered into negotiations to sell them to R. & J. Partington Ltd.

By August 1963 a price formula had been agreed between the existing company and Partingtons, subject to examination of the stock. In September 1963 two letters were exchanged between Partingtons and the existing company which, according to the Inland Revenue, constituted a contract for the sale of the shares. But the examination of the stock was not completed until October 26th, 1963. It was held in the High Court that the existing company continued to be beneficial owner of the shares of the appellant company until after October 14th, 1963 and accordingly the existing company was entitled to the loss carry-forward relief.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

WAS chatting with Scotty in his office, when the deputy-chairman entered with some brisk query about the latest cost-estimate for construction of the new showroom. Scotty, being a sales manager, shrewdly elected to temporize until he could assess the director's mood of the moment. Assessing it, on the whole, to be something less than benevolent, he rather breezily hazarded a guess which was substantially below the actual figure.

In the interests of accuracy I smoothly interjected the thought that ultimate results might prove to be somewhat higher, a correction which Scotty accepted with a good-humoured gibe about 'yon puir wee stickler for accuracy'. Not so our deputy-c. He never likes to hear accountants correcting his selling staff, so he hawed and hummed in some dudgeon while he sought for some consolation for Scotty.

'That carpet of yours is getting tatty', he announced suddenly. 'It's undoubtedly bad for our public relations to have all those worn patches showing. Why not get yourself a new one? Good image projection and all that; something customers can sink deep into and feel welcome and co-operative. And there's always the chance they might want one like it'.

The grateful sales manager accepted the suggestion with warm appreciation (after all, it was virtually a royal command) and gave a complacent smirk in my direction. Not to be outdone, I promptly asked for the same amenity. My own office carpet, I pointed out feelingly, was even more well-worn, with a brown fibrous path from the door to my desk, besides a discoloured blur where some ham-handed visitor had spilt his morning coffee, as well as at least three black smoulder marks where customers too high-and-mighty to use ash-trays had dropped their cigarette-butts. Wouldn't the deputy-c. consider a replacement for my room was equally well-merited?

But he rather pooh-poohed the idea. However, when I eventually persuaded him to go along and see the bare pile and ravelled fringes, he reluctantly agreed. Something unostentatious, naturally, he stipulated, to which I acquiesced with an assurance of an entirely appropriate item.

About ten days later I found Scotty and the maintenance engineer at one another's throats, metaphorically speaking. Nature red in tooth and claw seemed to be rampant. 'The deputy-chairman ruidy-well authorized it, and that's a' there is to it!' growled the salesman. The irate engineer smacked the table-top while he reiterated that the budget for building maintenance – and that included repairs and replacements and so-and-so furnishings – was his responsibility. And he had set his budget and had to stand over variances; it had been cut to the bone already. To allow some effete, luxury-wallowing shopwalker to incur charges without prior consultation with him was outrageous. He'd damned well take it up with the managing-director!

Scotty told him bluntly where he'd see him but a week later he received a yellow docket – what we call a Replacement Requisition Authorization – for completion in triplicate. He sent it back duly completed, then a week later got it back again with the message that according to 'personal benefit regulations' it needed the deputy-chairman's signature. That exalted character was unfortunately away on holiday and in his absence his private secretary somehow lost the R.R.A.

Eventually the engineer produced a range of samples and Scotty selected a flaring red-and-gold effort, a quotation was approved, mislaid, and found again. Then the engineer's staff ripped up the old carpet in clouds of dust on a day when Scotty was holding a special conference, which started off the vendetta all over again.

Scotty came to tell me his woes and looked shaken when he saw my handsome wall-to-wall Indian carpet. 'I got it the same evening from stock and charged it to petty cash, sub-section 5 (office furnishing replacements) of sundries', I told him. 'Why don't you come to the department that gets things done, when you want something?' My colleague said nothing, but his face purpled slowly and only a hasty cup of tea averted a further explosive situation.

The Domestic and International Consequences of the German Corporation Tax Split Rate

by Dr A. HEINING of the German Federation of Industries Secretary of the German Branch of The International Fiscal Association

CORPORATION INCOME TAX has existed in the German tax system since 1920. Until then, legal entities had usually been taxed just like natural persons in accordance with the income tax law. The first corporation tax rate to be introduced was 10 per cent. It was steadily increased, in particular from 1934 onwards, and by 1951-52 it was 60 per cent.

There has been a split rate of corporation tax since 1953. In that year the rate on qualifying distributions was reduced to 30 per cent, while the existing rate of 60 per cent remained in force for retained profits. After an amendment in 1955 there was, as before, a split rate of 51 per cent on retained profits and 15 per cent on distributed profits. Thus the split rate of corporation tax has for the last fourteen years been the form of taxation under which German corporations have been taxed.

I would like to stress at the outset that during these fourteen years of continuous application of the rate of 51 per cent and 15 per cent respectively, there have been continuous and vociferous representations for amendment. Claims for the abolition of the split rate were not always based on the same arguments; motivations changed as well. In the political sphere, it was the Social Democrats and the left wing of the CDU/CSU who during the first years were opposed to the split corporation tax. In their view corporations were thereby unduly favoured, and the taxation of corporations was identified with the taxation of the 'capitalists' against whom there was strong resentment, in particular during the early years after the Second World War.

Apart from this political attitude of certain groups, the split rate of corporation tax was debated in connection with the competitive advantage enjoyed by foreign-owned subsidiaries. There were people who feared that this sort of corporation tax would give German branch operations of foreign corporations substantial competitive advantages.

Finally, the prospect of the harmonization of tax systems in Europe has in recent years entailed considerations about changing this tax. In this context it is especially important that France has decided to introduce a corporate tax system which — while pursuing the same objectives — is opposed to the German system in some rather important points.

A distinction must be made between the different types of corporations (Kapitalgesellschaften) and the different forms of partnerships (Personengesellschaften). I shall use the word 'corporation' for the concept of Kapitalgesell-schaft, and 'partnership' for the concept of Personengesell-schaft. A corporation in this sense is a legal entity, where the capital is divided into shares and the management and production functions are not carried out by the stockholders.

A partnership, on the other hand, is an association of persons where the active participation of the associates is essential in carrying out its purposes. Such a partnership is not liable itself to corporation tax but the partners are individually liable for their share in the profit. Types of partnership are: Offene Handelsgesellschaft (OHG) (partnership), and Kommanditgesellschaft (KG) (limited partnership).

Special rates

Finally, it may be stated that besides the corporation tax rate of 51/15, there are special rates for certain corporations. But it is the split rate only to which I shall refer in my further statements. Contrary to publicly-financed corporations, corporations with only a few shareholders, i.e. privately-financed corporations, are not interested in profit distribution. Moreover, the capital market is more or less inaccessible to them. For these corporations, the basic rate is 49 per cent, and the rate on distributed profits, 26·5 per cent. Specially reduced rates are applicable to certain credit institutions concerned with the provision of long-term credit.

For the remaining corporate bodies, associations of persons, and estates and trusts, the tax rate is a uniform 49 per cent of the income. All non-resident entities subject to tax assessment, the profits distributions of which do not qualify for reduced tax rates, also belong to this group. This last group includes all German branch operations by foreign enterprises. Finally, there is the special corporation income tax—the so-called supplementary tax—of 36 per cent.

In so far as the subsidiary company pays corporation income tax at the rate applicable to distributed profits (at present 15 per cent) and the parent corporation does not re-distribute to its own members the dividends received, the retained 'affiliation' dividends are subject to a supplementary tax of, at present, 36 per cent which is payable by the parent corporation.

However, as I have said, while it was as well to mention these particulars in order to give a complete picture, in my further remarks I shall refer only to the split rate of 51/15, that is to say, to the publicly-financed corporations. Just one more remark concerning the rate of 15 per cent on distributed profits: not all distributions qualify for the reduced rate; it is only the so-called qualifying distributions (begünstigt Ausschüttungen) that enjoy the benefit of the reduced rate of 15 per cent.

A 'qualifying' distribution is a dividend or other profit distribution paid by a resident corporation in accordance with a declaration made in conformity with the rules of commercial law. The low rate of tax on distributed profits in Germany favours a high distribution by the German subsidiary to the foreign holding company.

It must be realized that these 15 per cent are not deductible. Since the 15 per cent is not distributed to shareholders, but paid to the tax office, it is subject to the basic rate of corporation tax of 51 per cent. Thus, in reality the dividend is not taxed at a rate of 15 per cent, but of 23.44 per cent. In Germany, we call this the 'shadow-effect' of the distributions rate.

It was in 1953, when we had just introduced in Germany the split rate of corporation tax, that an American professor called on me at my office. He just could not see the reason why we should favour the distributed profits instead of the profits retained in the corporation. He pointed out that at this time of utter under-capitalization of enterprises, German industry should not distribute profits, but on the contrary accumulate them. You see, even at that time the objectives of the reduced rate and its philosophy were not easy to understand at first sight.

Objectives of split rate

In order to explain the background of this measure, there are four objectives to be reached by our split corporation tax:

- (1) abolition of double taxation;
- (2) elimination of fiscal discrimination of self-financing of businesses;
- (3) strengthening of the capital market and the politically desirable wide dispersion of ownership;
- (4) the desirable competitive neutrality of all legal forms of businesses; legal forms mean on the one hand the corporation, on the other hand the business of the individual entrepreneur or the partnership.

Readers are probably familiar with the problem of double taxation of shares within the present system of corporate taxation in Great Britain. The point is that the profits realized by a corporation are liable to corporation tax on the one hand and to income tax on the shareholders on the other hand, inasmuch as they are distributed to them. In national and international discussions for many years it was generally acknowledged that such double taxation is justified neither from the point of view of fiscal law nor from that of fiscal or economic policy. The income which is taxed several times flows from one source only; it is earned but once, namely by the corporation. All other operations are just operations of distribution, which do not by themselves justify any additional taxation of income.

selves justify any additional taxation of income.

The split rate of corporation tax is one of several feasible methods for mitigating, or maybe even abolishing, this double taxation. Here, the tax relief is achieved at the first stage of the entire process, that is, on the side of the corporation, whereas at the second stage – on the side of the recipient of the distributed profit – full taxation continues in principle.

Another method of mitigating or eliminating double taxation would be the maintenance of full taxation of profits on the corporation's side and a tax relief on the recipient's side. Of course, further methods are conceivable, consisting of a combination of these two possibilities.

However, in the years 1953 to 1958 the argument that it was essential to mitigate or abolish the double taxation of dividends would not have convinced the German legislator of the necessity of introducing the split corporation tax. It was rather a number of important economic and sociopolitical effects on the capital market that were to be obtained by the lower rate on distributed profits.

Even the best management of the legal entity called 'corporation' can realize profits only if capital is made available for the purpose of realizing these profits, be it equity capital or borrowed capital. This means corporations depend on the capital market; without an efficient capital market they cannot exist.

Methods of financing

For investment purposes, corporations have three financing methods at their disposal:

- (a) self-financing with the profits realized;
- (b) financing by floating of bonds;
- (c) financing by raising new capital (equity capital, increase of capital).

For self-financing with the corporation's profits, disposable profits must be sufficiently high. For a comparison with the other two methods of financing, it is important to state that this kind of self-financing entails no future obligations for the corporation, apart from the full tax liability of profits.

Financing by floating bonds, on the other hand, necessitates later on the repayment of the borrowed capital as well as the contractual payment of interest until full repayment of the obligation. External financing by raising new capital does not entail any obligation of repayment, it is true, but in accordance with the strict rules of the capital market, it depends on the possibility and the readiness to declare reasonable dividends on the new capital.

Corporate taxation differs widely, depending on the corporation's method of financing. I have already pointed out that – apart from one single tax payment – self-financing does not entail any other permanent financial obligations.

The two methods of external financing, on the other hand, do involve such obligations. There is, however, a decisive difference between them arising out of the fact that for tax purposes interest is deductible but dividends are not.

Impressive computations have been made on the financial effects of this different tax treatment. The method and execution of these computations have not always been the same, but they have all led to the unequivocal result that if the double taxation of shares is not abolished or decisively mitigated, the very tax treatment causes a hopeless disadvantage for financing through shares, as against financing by the floating of bonds, and the more so as against self-financing.

By these computations it was found what profits a corporation has to realize in order to be able to pay either the interest on a loan at 6 per cent, or a dividend of 6 per cent on new capital. The computation shows very clearly how out of proportion is the cost of financing through shares in comparison with the financing by floating bonds and also with self-financing. Under the terms of the German tax system, a corporation declaring a dividend of 6 per cent must realize a profit of 7.5 per cent in the case of external financing. On the other hand, and considering the corporation tax rate of 60/60 applicable in 1952, the corporation had to have gross proceeds of 20.7 per cent; with today's rate of 51/15 they will still have to be as high as 12 per cent.

This comparative computation is often criticized as comparing the incomparable. It is true that interest and dividends differ basically in many ways. Most important is the fact that in the case of external financing, the capital will have to be repaid some time, whereas in the case of the raising of new capital such an obligation does not exist.

While recognizing the difference between interest and dividend, I still believe that in considering the effect of the split corporation tax on the cost of the different methods of financing this sort of comparison is entirely justified.

The corporation which raises new equity capital must be prepared and able to pay a reasonable dividend on this capital and it must establish its financial calculations accordingly. While there exists no legal obligation, as in the case of the interest to be paid for borrowed capital, the rules of the capital market are just as binding on corporations raising equity capital. Normally, the corporation cannot avoid with impunity the paying of interest on this equity capital – and the management does not wish to do so.

Remember, however, the introduction of the split rate of corporation tax in Germany was aimed at fighting this discrimination against financing through shares. This was the most important politico-economical objective of the reform. At the same time, the reform was meant to realize further objectives set by the Government in the spheres of social and economic policy.

Post-war reconstruction

During the first years of German reconstruction after the war, there was no effective general capital market. At most, there existed several controlled minor markets accessible only to specially privileged borrowers, for example, public authorities and the housing construction sector — not, however, to industry in general.

This, as well as the enormous capital demand in all economic sectors, may explain the fact that during the first years of reconstruction, the economy had to finance its activities almost exclusively with its own profits. At that time no criticism of this method was voiced. Then public support for the industrial economy consisted in a number of tax regulations which in the case of certain investments provided for a complete neutralization of excessive tax rates. The only important thing at that time was to reduce the general tax level, and this was done by special tax privileges.

The reason for encouraging financing by shares was to enable corporations to distribute their profits to their shareholders without assuming economically prohibitive burdens. These distributed profits were then to be put back again on the capital market by recipients in one or the other way. It was hoped to strengthen the capital market, and it was believed that, without official direction, the borrowers would try in a truly competitive manner to satisfy their capital requirements. It was assumed that the free market as the basis of competition would be the best guarantee that the investment with the most favourable economic prospects would also be the first to find investors. This selective effect of a free capital market would then be supplemented by the controlling effect of the exchange.

The split corporation tax enabled a corporation to distribute, without suffering prohibitive taxes, a substantial part of its profits to shareholders and also to satisfy their investment requirements, partly by taking up new capital, in a way compatible with the interests of the national economy. The splitting of the corporation tax rate also had the more comprehensive objective of a wider dispersion of ownership in productive capital. Experts started from the assumption that the still restricted group of shareholders could be extended to attract wider circles of savers only if the financing of the additional capital requirements of corporations could be met by the issue of new shares, and if shareholders could expect to receive permanent and adequate dividends.

Unincorporated businesses

There was, however, another very important aspect. In the German economy, we have not only corporations, but also hundreds of thousands of small, medium and large businesses without legal form, the partners of which are liable to income tax. It would be dangerous if the mere difference between the two tax systems — corporation tax on the one hand, income tax on the other — had side effects on competition in one or the other direction. The German legislator had therefore to try to manipulate these two kinds of taxation so as not to influence competition. From the point of view of competition we may restrict ourselves to a small number of principles, which are, however, extremely important.

There is among others the following principle: the relation between the tax burden of corporations and that of comparable partnerships is balanced if fiscal aspects do not play an important part in deciding on the legal form of a business, and the choice is in the first place determined by commercial considerations. The most significant comparative factor in this respect is the taxation of profits used for self-financing. If the profits retained in the businesses are taxed in substantially different ways this will in the long run have unfavourable effects. For a comparative study on the taxation of corporations on the one hand and partnerships on the other, only those partnerships are of interest, the profits of which are important enough to be taxed with the maximum rate of income tax. If partnerships with profits below this maximum rate are subject to a lower taxation, this corresponds to the principle of taxation according to capacity, inherent in the progressive rates of income tax.

During the first years after the war, there existed a marked competitive differential in favour of the business with corporate form. Income tax rates amounted to up to 95 per cent, whereas the corporation tax rate of 60 per cent was comparatively modest. In consequence of several tariff reductions in the 'fifties, the maximum rate of income tax was fixed at 53 per cent and in 1958 this rate was taken as the basis for shaping the corporation tax. From the viewpoint of competition, the self-financing of corporations was not to be favoured as against that of comparable partnerships, that is to say partnerships liable to the maximum rate of income tax of 53 per cent. If the corporation tax rate on retained profits had been fixed at 53 per cent like the maximum rate of income tax, this would have been reasonable only if there had been no additional tax burdens resulting from the corporation's legal form, that is to say if distributed profits were not taxed at all.

There is still another factor to be taken into account: the German tax system includes a property tax. This tax is deductible from income tax, but it is not deductible from corporation tax. Considering this non-deductibility in the case of corporation tax, it was believed that a corporation tax rate of 51 per cent on retained profits would mean a taxation of self-financing with no effects on competition.

It may be asked why corporations are charged with additional tax burdens on those profits which are no longer available for self-financing, in other words on distributed profits. Why is another 15 per cent imposed on them? This additional taxation is usually justified with the argument that corporations, because of certain special characteristics resulting from their corporate form (above all from the restriction of liability and their better access to the capital market) are able to stand an additional tax burden, as a sort of 'basic taxation' so to speak.

As already mentioned, the split corporation tax has always met with criticism.

One fact cannot be contested: the splitting of the corporation tax has resulted in a remarkable reduction of double taxation of shares. This means a cheapening of corporation distributions. Consequently, corporations were able to distribute more profits.

Effect on capital market

It is, of course, difficult to establish a detailed analysis of the capital market development in the years from 1953 until the present day. It is also difficult to prove with accuracy which causes exactly have influenced its development and it is equally difficult to define these causes qualitatively and quantitatively. However, it cannot be denied that before the introduction of the split corporation tax in Germany, we had no effective capital market. After 1953, distributions by corporations and increases of capital started on a larger scale for the first time. This development had structural reasons and the statistics show that it continued to an even larger extent after 1958.

Today, investment financing of new capital by the issue of additional shares and the payment of an adequate dividend to shareholders have become perfectly normal with the big corporations, which at that time were the prime target of all considerations regarding capital market policy in connection with the corporation tax rate. It is interesting to see that as an indirect result of the increase of capital, conditions for the raising of external capital have equally improved.

There can be no doubt that the split corporation tax has notably fostered this favourable development. Moreover, the more general objective of a wider dispersion of ownership has also been realized. In the years since 1958, the number of shareholders has multiplied. The actions of Preussag, Volkswagenwerk and VEBA for a wider dispersion of their shares could never have taken place without the new shareholders having the prospect of reasonable dividends - similarly with the denationalized businesses without the prospect of future financing by shares. On the other hand, these prospects could never have been held out if the dividends on the share capital had been taxed as heavily as before the introduction of the split tax rate. The higher the cost of financing dividends the lower are the profits left for internal financing and this consideration, of necessity, has an important influence on the amounts of dividends declared. Millions of shareholders are quite rightly interested not only in the soundness of their investment, but also in the dividends declared on it.

The split corporation tax has proved its usefulness also with regard to its neutral effects on competition between corporations and partnerships. Today, it may be pointed out that, since 1958, no general tendency towards a changing of the legal form for fiscal reasons has been noted. I think there can hardly be better proof of the neutral effects on competition.

From an objective point of view, however, there is a really serious problem in connection with the split corporation tax, namely a certain discrimination in favour of foreigners, which we call the Ausländereffekt meaning effect on foreigners. In the case of German subsidiaries of foreign parent corporations, the dividends are liable only to the distribution rate of 15 per cent (together with the fore-mentioned shadow-effect 23.44 per cent) and to the German withholding tax of 25 per cent. According to the German double taxation conventions the withholding tax was in most cases even reduced from 25 to 15 per cent. Apart from taxation at the source by the German withholding tax, the foreign parent corporation is not subject to German taxation; thus, there can be no supplementary German taxation in the case of accumulation of profits. However, from the viewpoint of competition, this is unfavourable only if:

- (a) the foreign parent corporation uses the distributed profits for reinforcing the financial strength and thereby the competitive position of its German subsidiary;
- (b) if the dividends of the parent corporation are not taxed in its own country.

Increase in withholding tax

If there is no supplementary taxation in the country of the parent corporation and if the dividends which have only been taxed in Germany are to a sizeable degree returned to the German subsidiary, then we get this so-called effect on foreigners which from a competitive point of view constitutes a discrimination. As early as 1958, the German legislator recognized that the combination of the split corporation tax with its rate on dividends together with taxation at the source reduced by double taxation conventions leads to a competitive situation which must be counteracted. By now, the Federal Government has succeeded in revising all double taxation conventions concerned, so that the German withholding tax on dividends distributed to foreign parent corporations has been increased to 25 per cent, the maximum rate admissible under national law. This applies in particular to the double taxation convention with the United States, with the modification that the increase from 15 to 25 per cent is applicable only in the case of direct or indirect reinvestment of dividends.

The question is whether this measure has really eliminated the influence on competition of this foreigners' effect. There exist computations with different results depending on the premises used. But even if in some individual cases, these computations show certain tax advantages for foreigners, it may nevertheless be assumed that there is no longer any serious structural competitive problem linked with this effect on foreigners. If contrary to all expectations, the foreigners' effect should in future cause further problems, there would still be the possibility of levying a sort of after-tax on reinvested profits, the feasibility of which has so far been unjustly considered doubtful by some experts.

In conclusion I must deal with still another aspect: the aspect of tax harmonization in the E.E.C. If the European Economic Community is ever to constitute a unified inland market, corporate taxation in member countries must not have different effects on competition. For this reason, the harmonization of corporation taxes is one of the main objectives of the integration of the Community.

France has introduced a different method of mitigating the double taxation of shares. The dividend is discharged on the shareholder's side, corporation tax fully maintained on the side of the corporation; this means equal treatment of retained and distributed profits. It must not be forgotten that Belgium, too, has a corporation tax with tax relief on the shareholder's side. Thus, there are significant differences as to the method. The E.E.C. will have to examine which method is more effective for the mitigation of double taxation with a view to investment financing and the necessities of the capital market and which method is the most neutral as regards the choice of the legal form.

Critical observation on French system

I feel I must in this context make a critical observation regarding the French system, not only in order to safeguard the interests of the German economy, but also in the interest of the future harmonization of corporation taxes in the Community.

Under the French corporation tax law, there is a uniform corporation tax rate of 50 per cent on retained as well as on distributed profits. The withholding tax on distributed profits is in principle abolished and the shareholder receives a tax credit of 25 per cent (sometimes also a refunding) when his dividends are taxed. This method of mitigating double taxation on the side of the shareholder does, however, not apply to foreign shareholders be they private individuals or corporations. The foreign shareholder has to pay a withholding tax of 25 per cent on French dividends distributed to him. He does not receive the tax credit. Computations taking into account the French-German double taxation convention have shown the following different net dividends for German and French shareholders of the same French corporation: in the case of ditributed profits of 100 and a 50 per cent income tax for natural persons, the German shareholder gets a net dividend of 25 per cent as against 37.5 per cent for the French shareholder. If the shareholder is a legal entity, for example a parent corporation, the latter receives a net dividend of 42.5 per cent whereas a French parent corporation gets a net dividend of 50 per cent.

Thus, French taxation solely favours the French investor. This gives rise to the fundamental question whether this sort of taxation is compatible with the objectives of integration and of the E.E.C. Moreover, it may be doubted whether such a system is suitable as the future harmonized system of the Community. At any rate, experts have so far expressed the view that the French tax reform involves a perceptible discrimination against foreign taxpayers and that this discrimination obviously pursues the politicoeconomic objective of protecting the French capital market to a certain extent against the outside world.

We have seen that the German system also involves a certain discrimination, but it is in favour of foreigners, whereas the French reform is in fact extremely disadvantageous to them. My impression is that there is no really equivalent alternative to the split corporation tax

A full double taxation of profits would mean that the uniform and general corporation tax rate must be fixed at such a low level that the total tax burden will not be higher than it is today with the split corporation tax. It must be realized that this would at the same time mean giving up the basis of a future systematic and satisfactory solution. It means to give up the very principle of avoiding double taxation and to take as a sole guideline merely utilitarian aspects. However, this argument is more of a scientific-theoretical nature which in practice will not always be all that important. What would the uniform corporation tax rate have to be like, in the circumstances existing in the Federal Republic without increasing the total tax burden so far supported by a business? There are no precise figures on this point. In discussions, figures are mentioned between 35 and 42 per cent and I am repeating them here only with the necessary caution. But even these figures show unambiguously that a double taxation of this magnitude cannot realize certain decisive objectives of the split corporation tax as the latter does, because double taxation has to work without the favourable effect of equal treatment of self-financing irrespective of the legal form and also without the effects of reduced cost of financing by shares in competition with self-financing and borrowing.

I think in Germany it cannot be considered justifiable from a politico-economical point of view to tax the selffinancing of corporations with a relatively favourable rate of let us say 40 per cent, whereas the medium-sized and larger partnerships have to report their self-acquired equity capital as income with the maximum rate of 53 per cent (plus church rates). On the other hand, a reduction of the income tax rate in order to compensate this difference would be altogether unrealistic.

With regard to the cost situation of the financing by shares, a uniform corporation tax rate of let us say 40 per cent would still mean a much higher tax burden on dividends than that imposed on interest paid on the same amount of borrowed capital, and above all it would mean also a considerably higher tax burden than exists today with the split corporation tax rate (corporation tax rate 40/40 and 6 per cent dividend: 14.1 per cent taxes in the case of financing by shares as against 12 per cent in the case of financing through obligations).

Conclusion

To sum up, the following should be stated: a uniform corporation tax rate with full double taxation necessarily causes a distortion of the relation between corporation tax and income tax, unless the total tax burden of corporations is considerably increased. It deteriorates the relation between absolute and relative tax burdens in the case of financing by taking up new capital. For this reason, the uniform corporation tax rate cannot be accepted as an equivalent alternative to the present split rate.

Would the French method be an equivalent alternative, or would it even be preferable?

Both systems have one thing in common: the reduction of the economic double taxation of dividends. In both cases, this double taxation can be reduced to non-existence. Both methods assure fiscal neutrality with regard to competition between the different legal forms – corporations on the one hand, partnerships on the other – by rating the taxation of self-financing in the case of corporations on the basis of the average maximum rates of income tax. In Germany - as in France – this would mean a uniform corporation tax rate of about 50 per cent.

Here my criticism based on the point of view of the economy comes in: only on those corporations for which the taxation of dividends does not play an important role - as in the case of a sole shareholder - would a uniform corporation tax rate of about 50 per cent have only minor financial effects. Other businesses, and in particular those which are covered by the split corporation tax rate would have to change their entrepreneurial considerations from a financial point of view. They would have to modify their distribution and financial policies. With a uniform corporation tax rate of 50 per cent, the tax charge on dividends as factor cost would deteriorate considerably. In the German economy, for a dividend of 6 per cent, the gross proceeds - including business tax and property tax would have to be as high as 16.7 per cent. Today, gross proceeds amount to 12 per cent with 7.5 per cent dividends to be paid on an obligation yielding 6 per cent.

Here is the point we must realize: the fact that the heavier burden of corporation tax is later on, on the side of the shareholder, neutralized by an income tax privilege, does usually not affect the cost situation of the corporation distributing the dividends. It is different in the case of a sole shareholder or few shareholders only.

This means that the corporation must reduce its dividend. Apart from these effects on the corporation, there is in addition another problematic aspect regarding the taxation of shareholders. The income tax relief to the shareholder raises a new competitive problem in the field of capital market policy. It will be considered a discrimination in favour of a certain kind of capital gains, namely of dividend income as against other capital gains, savings accounts or income from annuity bonds and of course also as against other kinds of income, for example, from industrial activities or from salaries and wages.

These aspects will give rise to political discussions on which expert opinion will differ, but which can, nevertheless, have an adverse influence on the appreciation of the position of corporations in our present economic and social system.

Finally, it would be as well not to forget the criticism mentioned earlier of the French system; we cannot accept a discrimination against those capital funds flowing into our economy from other countries. This would be incompatible with the objectives of integration within the E.E.C.

The result may be summarized as follows: the split corporation tax rate has proved effective in realizing its objectives both in the politico-economic field and in the spheres of capital market and social policy. Maybe the German system could be improved in detail looking at it realistically, no other conceivable system could have the same favourable effects on the German economy. German industry therefore holds the view that at least for the near future, there is no reason for giving up the split rate of corporation tax.

And a New Scheme to Put it Right

by WILLIAM PHILLIPS, F.I.A., F.S.S.

It was with much regret that we learned as this issue was going to press of the death last week of Mr Phillips, the author of this article. An obituary notice appears on another page.

Changed code number

EADING on from the arguments put forward in the first part of this article in last week's issue, let us now suppose that although Miss Bright's wages remain constant throughout the year, at the end of week 20 the employer is informed that her code number (to cover some new allowance unidentified to the employer unless by Miss Bright herself) has now been changed from 200 to 220. (Of course, if the writer succeeds in his advocacy the employer will previously have heard nothing about code numbers, but will instead have been informed that the secretary's 'free pay' for the year is £283 8s – which is all the code number can do by its present roundabout method and now will again hear nothing about code numbers but will be told that the 'free pay' for the year is amended to £335 8s.)

However, if the ludicrous code number system is still being used, it is fortunate that when the six volumes of Weekly Tax Tables were destroyed by fire the employer succeeded in rescuing not only Table B, week 52 pages, but also Table A, week 52 page. From the latter he derives the information, which he might better have been given in the first place, that the 'free pay' for the year is the said figure of £335 8s. He therefore does a little arithmetic, if Miss Bright is too busy to do it or her time is too valuable:

Free pay for the year	335 8	0
Taxable pay for the year	704 12	0
From Table B, total tax for the year	182 5	0
Tax deducted in first twenty weeks	76 10	0
Tax to be deducted over next 32 weeks	£105 15	0

Dividing by 32, this gives £3 6s for twenty-nine weeks and £3 7s for three weeks, mixed as before; but this time the official machinery gives a startling different result from that of the new machinery (see Table II).

After the change the new system deducts £3 6s a week for twenty weeks and £3 7s for each of two weeks, whereas the official system, having given Miss Bright (in effect) £6 14s in week 21 (long since squandered) deducts thereafter £3 10s a week for the remaining twenty-nine weeks and £3 19s in each of two others. Which system would a sensible Miss Bright, carefully balancing her budget each week, prefer?

Comparing columns (2) and (8), the writer appreciates that the refund in week 21 is a praiseworthy (?) provision by which the whole of Miss Bright's past over-payments are repaid to her (by her employer!) in one very prompt sum unless he screams at his Inspector of Taxes like a hurt child. (This prompt repayment, which apparently can be made week by week during absence from work, has been criticized as encouraging strikes!) In this case, the employer is lucky in that he only has to wait one week to recoup himself out of the week 22 tax deduction. But to what purpose?

Miss Bright has to be bright indeed on finding herself £6 12s better off than usual when she opens her week 21 pay envelope (no accustomed deduction of £3 16s or so, and instead a payment of £2 18s) and then does not think that next week she is £10 1s worse off! Furthermore, the weekly fluctuations of column (8) are in any case somewhat disturbing. After all, income tax is a yearly, not a weekly, tax, and one would have thought that if only for the sake of enormously increased simplicity and economy of the machinery, and to avoid weekly fluctuations which arouse the suspicions of the employee, a reimbursement spread over the balance of the year would suffice. If the code number were changed in week 51 it would have to be, not only under the official method but also under the advocated method, so long as Parliament adheres to the present scheme.

Reduction of code number

However, the writer would be prepared to admit that instant adjustment versus gradual adjustment is a matter of taste; there are advantages and disadvantages, until we look at the reverse case of a code number becoming smaller in the course of a fiscal year. Reverting to the £20 a week secretary with a code number of 200, suppose it is slightly reduced, say, to 196, as on and from week 30. Her tax computation for weeks 28 to 34 are shown in Table III.

Under the advocated method the employer would look at Table A, week 52, and see that the changed code meant no more than that for the year the 'total free pay' was reduced from £283 8s to £273, so that the year's 'taxable pay' was increased from £756 12s to £767. Accordingly he would see from Table B, week 52, that the year's 'total tax' was increased from £198 19s to £202 6s, an increase of £3 7s.

The employer can spread the sixty-seven extra shillings as additions to the previously alternating £3 16s and £3 17s weekly deductions; or, observing that he has deducted £110 19s over the first twenty-nine weeks (which he has had to record for the benefit of the Inland Revenue), finds he has to deduct £91 7s over the next twenty-three weeks (instead of £88 on the basis of code 200) and can recalculate the weekly deductions at £3 19s for thirteen of the weeks and £4 for the other ten.

On first thoughts it might be supposed that it must be seldom a code number is reduced in the course of a fiscal year; in fact, there are thousands upon thousands of widows who were over the age of 50 when their husbands died and who, until the end of October last, were receiving a widow's national pension of £4 a week. As a large proportion of these widows – excluding only the very elderly and not all of them – were in employment, their code numbers were less than they would have been, apart from the widow's pension. This pension, it will be recalled, was increased after the end of last October from £4 to £4 10s, and the figures of Table IV are not hypothetical, but represent precisely the position of these many thousands of employed pensioned widows had their code numbers been reduced.

The increase in tax effected by a change of code from 200 to 196 to tax the 10s increase in the widow's pension, could be expected to be small, but if all pensioned widows' codes had been amended at the end of October so that there was an increased tax deduction in week 30 of nearly £2, such a heartrending outcry would have echoed and reverberated around these British Isles as would have required the Prime Minister to persuade the Minister for Social Security not to threaten to resign, or at any rate not to resign. The Government funked it; they repudiated the 'instant adjustment' of which they are so proud when it works as a refund. Here is a copy of the printed circular letter sent to all these countless widows (and, of course, to employed male pensioners over the age of 70):

INLAND REVENUE

Income tax coding – National Insurance benefits Year 1967–68 (ending 5 April 1968)

Your code number for the year 1967–68 does not take into account the increase in the rate of your National Insurance benefits from 30 October 1967.

If your code number were altered now, you might suffer a heavy deduction of tax when the new code number was first used.

To avoid this your present code number will continue to be used until the end of the present income tax year (5 April 1968).

This will result in an under-deduction of tax estimated to be £3 6s.

As far as possible, collection of this tax will be spread over the year 1968-69 by taking it into account when fixing your code number for that year.

P82(P)

Our considerations of 'deduction at the source' have now arrived at a point where questions of machinery and of scheme have intermingled, for the level weekly increase in Mrs Widow's income of ten shillings a week for the remaining twenty-three weeks of the fiscal year merely calls for a corresponding increase in her weekly tax deduction of just under 3s a week.

It will be observed that the Inland Revenue letter above speaks only of additional tax for the period of approximately £3 6s. The Inland Revenue funked mentioning the important point that such is the present machinery for collecting the tax that of this extra £3 6s nearly £2 would be deducted in the first week. That, of course, is the reason the Revenue did not dare change pensioned employed widows' and elderly men's code numbers at the end of October last. Whatever our views upon 'instant adjustment' may be when a code number is increased in the course of the fiscal year, the position when a code number is reduced does not permit of arguments pro and con; the system is unworkable, or if worked produces grotesque results.

Bonuses and overtime

To illustrate the effect on P.A.Y.E. of the official method of calculating it we may first use the early weeks of Table I, since during those early weeks the peculiarity that 'free pay' per week — which under code 200 should be £5 9s — is tabulated as £5 10s makes little difference to the resulting 'tax deductible' in the week. We will suppose that in week 2 a sudden increase in activity for several days calls for considerable overtime at special overtime rates of pay, so that Miss Bright's pay for that one week is doubled at £40, and then reverts to £20 for week 3 onwards.

What will decimalisation cost you?

Start now and it will cost you less. Between now and 1971 Britain must convert or replace 5,000,000 monetary units – including yours.

Start now planning for 1971 – as British Olivetti have already done. Olivetti's new '71 range, specially designed for the special British requirements, will work in £ s. d. until 1971, in both £ s. d. and decimals during the changeover period, and in the future British decimal currency forever afterwards.

Start now by requesting British Olivetti to give you a free survey of your accounting, invoicing and adding equipment. In 1971 your present £ s. d. machines will be worthless. But they have a value now. Find out exactly what decimalisation will cost you – and how you can spread this compulsory cost.

Ask British Olivetti

£ s. d. to decimals with Olivetti '71 range – the only complete range of accounting, invoicing and adding machines specially designed for Britain's present and future currencies.

Instant switching by the operator, from £ s. d. to decimals and back again – No conversion or modification required – Capacity, program, keyboard, unaffected by currency change – Handles every aspect of the future special British decimal currency, including the new ha'penny.

The tables show the tax deductible in week 2 of £10 5s. This deduction makes a nasty hole n the extra £20. Miss Bright will realize that the deduction is 'only' £6 gs more than last week's £3 16s, though even that rather spoils the look of the extra £20. But what is worse, believe it or not, is that millions of workers on getting their pay envelopes at the end of a week in which there has been substantial overtime, or a bonus payment, fall into the fallacy of setting off the whole £10 5s against the extra £20, so that much grumbling results.

The new method could arrive at approximately the same figure, if the extra tax is to be deducted immediately, since so soon as one gets above the 'bottom slices' of income on which tax is deducted at 4s or 6s in the f respectively, we have no more arithmetic to do than to calculate the extra tax on the extra f,20 at seventy-seven pence in the f, which is f5 8s 4d, or (say) £6 9s. But (again) income tax is a yearly tax and there are manifest reasons for making the weekly deductions as nearly uniform as possible. Spreading £6 9s, namely, 129 shillings, over fifty-one weeks calls for two shillings extra in each of twenty-three weeks and three shillings extra in each of the remaining twenty-eight weeks. Can there be any doubt that Miss Bright (to say nothing of millions of workers who are not so bright) would be much more thrilled by the extra £20 she has earned in week 2-ii only the Inland Revenue would allow us to spread her extra £6 9s of tax over the balance of the fiscal year? As the extra £3 6s of tax on pensioned widows is to be spread next year.

Admittedly the spreading process would not be so effective in week 28, for example, as in week 2, as extra tax of £6 9s would have to spread over twenty-five weeks, an average of just under 5s 2d a week extra tax; and the process would be of little effect for an overtime payment of £20 in week 51, with only a two-week spread, and indeed highly inconvenient for the employee and totally ineffective for such a payment in week 52. But that is the fault – and it is a very serious one – of the scheme on which P.A.Y.E. is besed; it can only be avoided by the new scheme here acvocated.

It is obvious that what applies to one payment for exceptional overtime, or one bonus (say at Christmas) is equally applicable to a series of overtime payments, or more than one bonus. At present the additional tax liability to which they give rise is dealt with at once, but in any case could only be discharged on the 'hire-purchase' easy-payment principle over an ever shortening period as the date of the extra pay gets nearer to the next ensuing April 5th. We are beginning to see trouble with the new machinery as with the old so long as the present scheme is continued.

The snag in the new machinery

As has been seen, the new machinery – designed to abolish and so save the expense of printing Table B – has less and less advantage over the present system as

April 7th becomes nearer – so long as we adhere to the present scheme. (This, of course, will not prevent the immediate abolishing of those useless code numbers and the unnecessary Table A.) However, the new machinery would, with the present scheme preserved, break down entirely if applied to casual labour, or indeed any employment where the earnings vary from week to week. This fact, indeed, is the clue to the whole elaborate P.A.Y.E. system of Table B. It does not seem unfair to say that in order to deal with remuneration which fluctuates weekly, a system has been set up which has then been imposed upon a vastly larger population of employees whose earnings remain constant week after week, save for a possible increase annually, or an occasional bonus - for all of whom it is not only ridiculously too elaborate, is costly for the employer, does not work well when a code number is increased, and breaks down completely when a code number is reduced.

THE NEW SCHEME

The ten steps

The root principle of the new scheme is that, as formerly, each employee will be taxed over each fiscal year on his earnings of the previous fiscal year. Thus all weekly fluctuations will be ironed out.

At present, every employer necessarily keeps a record of the earnings of each of his employees from week to week. He will continue to do so, but only the total for the fiscal year ending on April 5th will be of significance. (The adaptation of the new scheme to staff paid calendar-monthly will be obvious.) The new scheme consists of ten steps, eight of which only have to be taken once a year:

- (1) On April 6th the employer will check the total of the employee's earnings for the fiscal year just ended, and enter it on a new Weekly Deduction Card.
- (2) During those preceding 365 or 366 days the employee will have kept H.M. Inspector of Taxes informed of anything which will affect his 'free pay for next year'.
- (3) On April 5th the inspector will send this figure to the employer.
- (4) At the same time the inspector will inform the employer of any debt due from the employee to the State. (As, for example, income tax which under the procedure of step (10) below remained uncollected in the year just ended, or repayment of social security paid to the wife for herself and children while her husband, the employee, was on strike, and still not repaid, or not completely repaid.
- (5) On April 6th the employer will take the employee's last year's total earnings and reduce it by two-ninths. (The figure thus produced will be checked by someone else by seeing whether, increased by two-sevenths, it comes back to the last year's total.)

N.B. If the Inspector is aware of any extramural earnings of the employee these, reduced by two-ninths, will have been deducted from the 'free pay' figure he has sent to the employer, which may in consequence be a negative quantity.

- (6) From the thus reduced last year's earnings (A) the employer will deduct the forthcoming year's 'free pay for the year' (B) (or add it if it is negative), thus arriving at taxable pay (C).
- (7) Assuming this exceeds £300, he will calculate tax on the excess at the standard rate of tax. (This will no longer be the fantastic figure of ninety-nine pence in the £, but some easily applied decimal fraction. For purposes of illustration, until our currency is decimalized, assumed as  $8s \ 4d = 100$  pence in the £=five-twelfths.)

The result will then be added to £80 to produce total tax (D) to be collected in the forthcoming year.

- (8) To this will be added any debt to the State notified under step (4) above (E), to produce the total deduction (F) to be made from remuneration during the year just commencing.
- (9) Total deduction doubled and with the decimal point moved two places to the left, gives normal weekly deduction for fifty weeks (G).

(Slogan: 'Income tax payable only fifty weeks in the year!' Highly popular, however illogical!) [For monthly-paid employees (F) will be divided by 12; no likelihood of their being bluffed by 'Monthly income tax payable only eleven and a half months in the year.']

(10) The tax deduction record card will have space for fifty-two weeks, not labelled with the meaningless numbers 1, 2, 3 etc., but with the dates at present ascertainable from what will no longer exist. The amount of the weekly deduction will be entered against the first taxation week, which, however, will not be April 6th to 12th, but the first Monday in April after April 7th, to the following Sunday. It will continue to be added week by week as deducted. The space in that column for any week in which a deduction cannot be made - owing to the employee's absence from work with no wages - will be crossed out by the employer diagonally. When more than two weeks have been thus crossed out the weekly tax for weeks in excess of two will be spread forward over such period as the employee selects or, failing selection, the whole period to the end of the fifty-second week - except that tax not deducted in any week after the forty-second may, if the employee desires, be carried forward to the following year.

The Misunderstanding of O. & M.

by M. E. ADDISON, B.A., M.I.O.M., M.O.M.S.

THE origins of organization and methods lie in the changes which have revolutionized administrative and clerical work in the present century. Universal literacy has meant that almost anyone can carry out simple clerical routines; psychologists have proved that the 'brainwork' content of many clerical jobs is no more than that of factory work, while mechanization and automation invade the office from all sides.

Such is the change that the atmosphere of large modern offices is more akin to light engineering than to the older type of clerical environment. This analogy becomes more credible when it is realized that offices are now organized like factories: flow-line production processes have been applied to such major routines as dispatch note production, the posting of sales and purchase transactions, public utility billing, bank transactions and insurance payments. Linked with the flow-line concept is the fragmentation of tasks into chains of easily-learned and easily-performed operations.

It is the size of the job more than anything else which has led to the subdivision of administration. Such basic routines as sales and purchase ledger and payroll have been removed from the accounting function to such an extent that they are no longer recognizable as such. In large organizations the 'Accounts Dept' often means the 'Control Accounts Dept' – the input to which are the summaries of transactions from the mass production quasi-accounting departments. This division, however, has been on a 'line' basis – the authority of each of the managers of such departments still appears relatively large, and the 'unity of the executive function' is still preserved.

Different problem

Such areas as have so far been removed would be considered of a minor nature and mechanized or semi-mechanized. In this category can be placed filing and mailing, two relatively early specializations with, at a later date, centralized typing and reprographic services. Computing, although more significant, is still a functionally similar specialization. The arguments for centralization are well known: specialist supervision, training and control, the economies of large-volume processing and appropriate environments. In all these specializations there is little threat to the 'line' administrative manager: he has lost only what are, for the most part, machine-based routine tasks.

Organization and methods, however, presents a different problem in that it is not a specialization aimed at the removal of routine work, but an inquiry into the very running of 'line' departments – into the organizational structure, into the systems and procedures, and into the processes of control and reporting. It has its analogies in the factory but it is a new arrival in administration. It performs no executive function itself but advises others, the word 'advises' being the key to living with it.

Rarely, since the beginnings of work study around the end of the nineteenth century, has there been a profession so misunderstood as organization and methods. Work study was misunderstood because it was divorced from its framework – the whole concept of 'scientific management' as evolved by F. W. Taylor and his associates. O. & M. is misunderstood because it is viewed narrowly as a 'saver of clerical staff', ergo, a creator of redundancy. This is unfortunately often the intention with which senior executives introduce it, the intentions of its practitioners and also, quite reasonably, the attitude of those who have or may be subjected to it.

Dangers of misapplication

There are many dangers in misapplied O. & M.: the working methods of departments can be completely revised and staff left untrained, unconvinced and disgruntled; managers may be left with unworkable forms or monstrous machines brought in at great cost for some obscure and ill-communicated purpose; in the ultimate a badly-managed redundancy programme can eject staff in an inhumane manner and leave the survivors with morale and loyalty shattered beyond all repair. Managers and accountants would no doubt complain bitterly about such results; part of the responsibility would, however, lie with themselves in allowing such a state to come to pass without protest. Did they really understand O. & M.?

O. & M. is advisory; its practitioners should have a body of knowledge and techniques which enables them to help 'line' executives to improve the working of their departments. O. & M. has developed because the office is now so organized as to be susceptible to disciplined work study; there is a need to choose from among a vast field of machines, to make use of advanced methods of form production and handling, to lay out complex clerical flowlines, to devote time to the study of other similar organizations and to co-ordinate and schedule changes among many departments.

In 1901 only I per cent of the total employed population was classed as 'clerical'; the figure has now risen to around 15 per cent. 'Line' executives lack the time to devote to curbing this dramatic growth rate; neither have they time to gain the broad command of detail in many differing areas necessary to implement coordinated change. This, however, is not to say that they should have change forced upon them.

Can we, therefore, dispose of one fundamental misconception – that O. & M. should be enforced? Any executive must have complete control of his department. It is only in this way that he can be made accountable for its effectiveness, and if he has methods or organizational changes forced upon him then he loses part of his authority. The O. & M. staff, if they demand enforcement, are accepting authority and if they do so must be accountable for failure. If the 'line' manager can accept or reject their ideas and accepts without close examination a future failure, then he is accountable for that failure.

Moral obligation

Nor should O. & M. be accused of 'shuffling off their responsibility' by demanding for the 'line' the right of acceptance or rejection; this is, after all, what the 'line' wants and complains of it it does not get. This strict interpretation of organizational theory imposes a moral obligation on O. & M. to see that the line manager is properly advised and that relevant facts and figures are not withheld from him. If a sick man is badly advised by his doctor then it is the sick man who dies and not the doctor. It is much the same with an O. & M. project.

Enforcement, then, is a non-starter. If a system is enforced then the 'line' manager gets no credit for it and his status may suffer; if it is a failure he can blame O. & M. but he will be left gathering the fragments. In either case his authority has been eroded. For O. & M. enforcement of a successful system may leave resentment smouldering in the heart of the manager who was wrong; failure means that the manager has somebody to blame and somebody whom he most certainly will blame.

The ideal is the co-operation of the manager and the O. & M. staff, the former contributing specialist knowledge of his department; the latter his generalized problem-solving technique. The new ideas are thus a joint evolution; the two parties agreeing each stage; with a genuine desire for improvement on one hand and professional competence on the other, success is not far away.

To become a real partner with a line manager during a project, an O. & M. man needs a certain body of knowledge. Some of this is assumed as part of his specialist experience: project method, recording, interviewing, layouts, follow up of implications into all areas concerned, forms design, evaluation of machinery, etc. He should also have a general knowledge of comparative systems in other organizations and a general appreciation of the current trends in business machine developments. He should understand the principles of organization: delegation, spans of control, concepts of authority and responsibility, as well as motivation and other aspects of human relations and industrial psychology.

This already presupposes a man of considerable experience — an ideal which probably rarely occurs in practice but still an ideal. In a long-term project, the O. & M. man may well get to know more about current practices in a department than does its manager. In many ways this is reasonable, the manager delegates and therefore may not know the details of departmental working. He is not by this definition an ineffective manager — usually the reverse.

One more misconception needs disposal: perhaps it would be better characterized as an ineffective bleat. Some O. & M. men state repeatedly: 'We are not concerned with people but with systems.' This is a well-meant attempt to be neutral regarding personalities; it may also be an attempt to ignore a very difficult area of practice.

People are the essence of administration; there is a formal organizational structure in any organization—but there is also an informal social organization—a chain of interpersonal relationships which, if disrupted, has the same effect as the disruption of an army's esprit de corps. To avoid this disruption, change must be progressive with pauses for adjustment and consolidation at each stage.

'Line' managers avoid change because they know it is often disliked; O. & M. should understand this natural feeling and not decline to have anything to do with it. An exclusive concern with systems will mean that the O. & M. department ignores the very social core of the organization – and, incidentally, destroys its right to half its job title.

Common-sense ethics

The 'ethics' of O. & M. are really common sense, in many ways self-interest if by self-interest we mean an effective department attaining its objectives. Honesty of purpose and due regard to human motivation are the basic points. A dishonest purpose may succeed once, even twice, but sooner or later people realize that they are dealing with dishonesty and withhold future co-operation.

Similarly, if projects are badly managed then the same lack of co-operation will ensue – this time on the grounds of technical incompetence. O. & M. in a company is not confined to one or two projects but theoretically will exist in perpetuity. There should, therefore, be small beginnings to an O. & M. function, consolidation at each point of progress and the establishment of a reputation for technical competence, honesty of purpose and human consideration. The executives of a company can ensure that this comes about by co-

The erence that nearly ended in

In twenty years in business I've never known the like!" declared Bill Williams, angrily banging the board room table.

"And neither have I!" echoed the man on his left, furiously. The ten top sales representatives of Lomax Foods (Warwickshire) Ltd. were gathered for their half-yearly Sales Conference. And Michael Lomax, Managing Director, had just dropped his bombshell.

No new accounts to be opened.

No increase in orders to be taken from existing customers.

A complete clamp down. For six months.

"We work twenty-five hours a day to sell and expand" complained Bill Williams bitterly, "and now you tell us things have got snarled up at your end. It's rank bad management I say,"
"Hear, hear," agreed others.
"Gentlemen, please be reasonable," urged the M.D. "I'm as disappointed as you are.

"Aye, but you don't lose commission," Bill Williams countered. "We shall. And I'm booked for a holiday in Spain on the strength of my new orders. What do I tell my wife and family now?"

"It's no use getting hot under the collar, Bill. Even you can't get away from economic facts. We haven't got the money to give extended credit over and above our present commitments. And without it we can't take on extra business. So we've got to go easy. Otherwise I'll be faced with not enough in the kitty to pay the wages and salaries. Including

'I still say it's rank bad management."

"Watch it Bill," snapped the M.D. sharply.

It was then that a quiet man at the bottom of the table spoke up.

"I think I've got the answer," he said. "Credit Factoring. I was reading about Shield Factors' service only the other day. It gives manufacturers a steady inflow of cash, the amount depending only on their sales, and it abolishes ledger-keeping costs too.

"We need never have another bad debt either," he continued. "And as for worrying about money to pay the wages and salaries—Shield Factors have made that a thing of the past." "Then why in heaven's name didn't someone tell me about Shield Factors before?" demanded Michael Lomax, visibly brightening. "I'll get on to them right away."

He did. And now he's got the happiest team of go-ahead reps. for miles around. Commission and profits are going up every month as new accounts are opened and bigger orders accepted. As for Bill Williams, his daughter got engaged on the last night of the holiday. In Spain, of course.

 Details of Shield service are given in this booklet: "Credit Factoring", a copy of which is waiting for you. Write or 'phone (asking for Mr. F. R. Salinger or for Mr. E. S. Davis) and it will be sent to you by return.

This is how Equity & Law are advising the public to seek professional advice about life assurance.

If it is true that all cats are grey at night . . . choose yours in broad daylight.

Just like those grey cats, at first sight all life assurance policies may seem much the same. At second, third and fourth sight, the differences between them become more and more marked. There are over a hundred life assurance companies in the country, each with a choice of terms, conditions, benefits and premiums. Choosing which particular policy will suit you best can be a difficult business—or a simple one. Difficult if you try to sort it out for yourself; simple if you take expert advice.

So ask your insurance broker, or other professional financial adviser on business matters. He will suggest a suitable policy and, equally important, a thoroughly sound insurance company to take it out with—a company such as Equity & Law.

operative pressure. A company will get the O. & M. it deserves.

Summary

The aims of O. & M. can now be summarized: they fall into two categories – in relation to people and in relation to things. The aims in relation to people are those probably most neglected and misunderstood: there are two relevant points. People tend to form social groups, and as individuals have a desire for status. If the social group – that is, a chain of personal relationships – conforms closely to the work group then harmony will result. This means that in an established department, differences of personality will have been solved progressively by physical apartness while sympathetic personalities will have gravitated into closer working relationships. Ruthless rearrangements by O. & M. in the interests of 'efficiency' can cause trouble.

Similarly people take their status and much of their well-being from the job they do and their satisfaction in it. Remove the interest from that job by subdivision of the task or by standardization, and again there can be trouble. Trouble in this context means a lowering of morale and a decline in output; it can decline further into outright hostility. The two basic factors of personality can be developed into a whole body of knowledge about human behaviour. Many managers, accountants and O. & M. men are ignorant of this knowledge even though it is an important science directly relevant to their jobs.

Against the human angle must be balanced other factors. Any organization is 'in business' to provide goods or a service at the lowest appropriate cost. There is a limit beyond which an O. & M. man can pander to the desire for no change. Clerical and direct savings must be made, the former by simplification, elimination of duplications, appropriate machinery, etc.; the latter by reason of the improved systems. Service to customers must be improved, while managers and technicians must be given the summaries and control information which they require.

Sense of adventure

A balance has, therefore, to be achieved. Customer inquiries could be so arranged that any information was available within seconds but at excessive clerical cost; material control systems could be simplified at the expense of extra stocks, while excessive subdivision of tasks on clerical flow-lines can lower morale and hence team-work and output. No single aim of O. & M. can be pursued in isolation and the most significant aim has not yet been mentioned. It is the one which, if successful, will ensure the continuation of O. & M. as an advisory function in the organization - the aim of making people accept change readily and with a sense of adventure. This can only be achieved by building a history of past successful changes where nobody was hurt and where new methods visibly resulted in improved effectiveness.

O. & M. can put its own house in order, can clarify its aims and develop its working methods. I have set out here an ideal which, even if rarely achieved is in no way by that fact, depreciated as an ideal. Managers and accountants must assist in this development of a relationship with administration's first specialist function. This can only be achieved by understanding how that function should work and then by group pressure ensuring that it does so. To repeat the phrase, a company will get the O. & M. it deserves.

Taxation Case

A full report of the case summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgment, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'

Alfred Wood & Co Ltd v. Provan

(Before Mr Justice Buckley)

Income tax – Partnership business – Discontinuance – Sale of business – Part price apportioned to machinery and plant – No notice to purchaser – Balancing charge – Whether total purchase money apportionable – Whether just apportionment to machinery and plant – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 292, 323, 326, 329 – Finance Act 1952, Schedule 6, paragraphs 2, 3.

The earlier proceedings in this case are reported in The Accountant, November 11th, 1967, from which it will be seen that the company carried on business in partnership with Mr Wood, and appealed against a balancing charge. The charge was calculated on an apportionment of the sale price of the business. The appeal was against the method of apportionment, but was dismissed.

In the present proceedings the appellants moved that the previous hearing should be adjourned, or that the stated case should be remitted to the General Commissioners on the grounds (i) that the point taken by the Inspector, that at the time of the apportionment it did not appear that the apportionment affected another party, was contrary to fact; (ii) that the other point taken by the Inspector, that the appellants consented to the apportionment being made by the General Commissioners in question was also contrary to fact; (iii) that there should be an apportionment binding on both the appellants and the other party.

Held: as the grounds of the motion were available for the appellants to take before the General Commissioners, or in the previous proceedings in the High Court by objecting to the way the case had been stated, it would not be right to accept the motion, and that it should, therefore, be rejected.

Associated Fisheries

NCLUSION of the 1966-67 first quarter's results along with the 1965-66 report and accounts was a particularly informative exercise achieved by Associated Fisheries Ltd last year. The 1966-67 report and accounts, however, did not include the 1967-68 first quarter's figures and shareholders have to read very nearly to the end of the chairman's statement to find the reason why - or why not.

He reminds shareholders that quarterly interim results were first issued in March 1965 but 'with so many of our activities subject to seasonal fluctuations, it has been apparent that quarterly figures in isolation are not necessarily indicative of any particular trend and can be misleading'. Quarterly statements are therefore being discontinued but the company 'will of course issue half-yearly results as required by the Stock Exchange'.

Before dismissing the decision as a retrograde step, critics (and critics there inevitably will be) might consider, in all fairness, Associated Fisheries' position. A glance at the 'Summary of group turnover and trading profit' shows that trawling and port wholesaling provides the bulk of the group's turnover although not, in the year under review, anything like the bulk of the profit. Trawling, and the wholesaling that goes with it, is not only a seasonal business but one in which the seasons rarely run to a true pattern. Associated Fisheries ought to be congratulated on having tried 'quarterlies' rather than criticized for deciding to give them up.

Financially battered

The recent trawling disasters off Iceland have inevitably directed public attention to the trawling industry of late. The Kingston Peridot was one of the group's trawlers and Mr Michael Noble, the chairman, comments that 'it is particularly grievous that none of the very modern equipment with which the Kingston Peridot was fitted was of any avail to save her or her crew'.

The industry has been financially battered over the past two years. A year ago Mr Noble recorded a drop in trawling profits on a year where there had been eight months' good fishing and four months' bad. In the year under review, the group, he says, 'did not have a single month which came up to the results we were having before May 1966'. The large over-supply of frozen fish in the world, combined with the fact that Britain was the most open market for surplus fish, meant that while costs rose steadily, any inclination that the market had to rise was frustrated by the great tonnages of imports.

At present the price of frozen fish is rising in the United Account, the companies in the Group have taken accounts in place of Capital Allowances (other than investment allowances) on properties, trawlers, plant, etc., which will be claimed for traxtion purposes. The difference between the taxation charges so calculated and the taxation than been of the profits for the year has been transferred to Corporation Tax Equalisation Account. Corporation Tax is calculated at the rate of 40% for the half year ended 31st March 1967 and 421% for the half year ended 30th September 1967.

In arriving at the charges for exaction on profits shown in the Consolidated Profit and Loss —based on the profits of the year amounts to 2264,900 and is raduced by £12,000 (1966; £17,000 for past losses including Capital Allowances and by £46,000 (1966; £152,000) for Investment

States and is 30 per cent above its price last year. This is bringing stocks out of cold store and making the United Kingdom less vulnerable to dumping of surplus stocks. Rising costs of meat, and probably poultry, should help the fishing industry and the cyclical turn seems to have reached its trough. On that basis Mr Noble predicts substantially higher current year earnings.

Released funds

Meanwhile, Associated Fisheries has been reorganizing to the extent of selling its Glacier and Fropax frozen food interests for  $f_{3\frac{1}{4}}$  million cash which was well over  $f_{3\frac{1}{4}}$  million more than book values. Notes 10 and 11 refer to this transaction and indicate the buyers. The released funds will allow development to be undertaken within the group, possibly on the catering side where the group in the past year invested in management training rather than physical expansion.

The first item in Note 4 to the accounts and the figure £20,988 is the residual after relief for corporation tax of the result of a High Court action begun by Mr Avison Wormald against the company in respect of the termination of his employment and which was settled by the payment by the company of £35,000 and costs. Mr Wormald resigned as a director on March 9th, 1967, having previously 'ceased to be' the company's chief executive.

Mr Wormald was particularly prominent when the Ross Group put in a take-over bid for Associated Fisheries. The deal was subsequently ruled out of order by the Monopolies Commission and both Ross and Associated have fallen on hard times since. But for the Associated group there does seem an immediate prospect of improving earnings and, although the decision to discontinue providing quarterly figures may delay the verification of the rising trend, the half-year results should prove encouraging, provided the cyclical trend in the fishing industry does not prove to have touched only a false bottom.

Market valuation

UOTED investments of The Imperial Tobacco Company (of Great Britain and Ireland) Ltd are stated on a market valuation basis in the accounts this year. While the market value has always been shown by way of a note in the accounts, the directors consider, and the auditors agree, that the group balance sheet would present a more realistic view of the relative significance of the group's assets and of its financial strength if the quoted element of its investment portfolio were entered in the balance sheet at year-end market values and the group's reserves position adjusted accordingly.

In future years the quoted element of the group's investments will be revalued at each year-end and any resultant movement in values will be shown as a variation in reserves. The figures involved are substantial. Quoted investments held by the Imperial Investments Ltd subsidiary, at a cost at July 1962 valuation of £25 million, had a market valuation of £193.8 million at the balance sheet date of October 31st last.

Over the group as a whole the cost or valuation basis of quoted and unquoted investments is £39.3 million, with a market valuation of the quoted investments of nearly £208 million. Some of these investments are held as trade investments, notably the 28.53 per cent stake in British American Tobacco which had a market valuation of nearly £147.9 million last October.

CITY NOTES

THERE are two overriding factors in financial markets—gold and the Budget, and the greater of these is undoubtedly gold. Last week-end's Basle meeting of Central Bankers drew forth yet another reaffirmation of the majority international determination to maintain gold at $35 an ounce.

The reaffirmation must have been a majority one, unless the French hypocritically voted in favour with one hand and went away firmly resolved to vote against gold with the other. But the Basle reaffirmation is unlikely to take the heat off gold for very long.

Continued reaffirmation is a devaluation exercise in itself. It creates its own credibility gap and although immediate hopes of a higher gold price or some other action on gold may prove to have been dimmed they will not stay dimmed for long.

That is particularly so while the United States remains entangled in the Vietnam war and, also, remains entangled economically and politically in their year's Presidential elections. The more the pressure is exerted on gold the more likely – some say inevitable – a higher gold price becomes, if not this year, then in 1969.

At the present rate of deterioration in the American balance of payments and internal economic situation it is becoming increasingly difficult to see how $35 an ounce for gold can be successfully defended.

NEXT Tuesday's Budget has, in anticipation, made little impression on the stock-market other than to pinch out an equity rise which had probably gone far enough in any event. As usual, the Chancellor has not lacked for advice, but if the object of the Budget is to take money out of the economy and at the same time not cramp industry, then the tax pattern must be towards the imposition of higher duty on drink and tobacco, higher taxation on motoring and the reimposition of purchase tax on the very wide range of goods which do not carry the tax now.

That is the obvious pattern. Less obvious are the mechanics through which the Chancellor will impose dividend restraint or even limitation. Less obvious also is the extent to which the Chancellor is likely to go along with left wing 'soak the rich' demands. A stock-market point, however, is that Budgets very rarely change the course of the stock-market to any dramatic degree. The one recent exception was the July 1966 'full stop' interim Budget operation. Even then the subsequent short, heavy shake-out merely provided the spring-board for an equity revival which took the market in index terms to an all-time peak.

T will be interesting to see the effect on the gilt-edged market of a Budget that proves intensely deflationary. At the short end of the market a reduction to  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in Bank rate is already discounted to a fair degree, but until very recently there has been no movement of funds towards the medium or long dated sectors of the market. Control of equity dividends could assist gilt-edged stocks for a time but basically the market needs either an actual reduction in interest rates or the prospect of such a reduction. Under current conditions of unease in sterling, indirectly as a result of unease in the dollar, there seems little room for Bank-rate manoeuvre. Sooner or later, however, there must be some effort to get Bank rate down if only because Bank 1ate at 8 per cent has ceased to serve any real internal economic purpose. Bank rate at 7 per cent, with the same backing of stringent credit controls as now exists, would work just as well and might even tempt some external confidence.

C.M.I. and Joint Diploma Schemes

Part of Qualifying Examinations to be Merged

MAJOR step has been taken in the rationalization of post-qualifying education. The examinations for the Certificate in Management Information and for Part I of the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services are to be merged and a number of changes made to the Diploma scheme in order to open it to a greater number of members.

These new arrangements stem from a recent review by the Councils of the participating bodies of the progress made with the schemes for the Joint Diploma (promoted by the three Chartered Institutes, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants) and for the Certificate in Management Information (sponsored by the Institutes of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, and in Ireland).

Details of the changes

The Certificate in Management Information and Part I. The two examinations will retain their separate titles but will have identical papers and will be run simultaneously in October each year beginning in 1968. The C.M.I. syllabus of four subjects will be adopted and the present Diploma Subject V (general financial knowledge and investigations) will be dropped. Candidates may enter for the examination about two years after qualifying. There will be no minimum age limit and no requirement for practical experience.

Candidates who are preparing for the 1968 examination using the existing syllabuses for the Certificate or for Part I should continue to do so. The examination questions will be appropriate to both syllabuses. Candidates for the 1969 examination should base their studies on the revised syllabus and reading list which are available from the English or Irish Institutes or from the Diploma Board.

These arrangements will allow courses for the C.M.I. and Part I to be combined, thus easing the strain on the limited resources of the colleges which are providing tuition at a post-qualifying level.

All who qualify in the examination will be eligible to enter for Part II of the Diploma when they have acquired the necessary practical experience. Successful candidates who are members of the English or Irish Institutes will also be awarded the Certificate in Management Information.

Candidates for the 1968 examination must register by May 1st either with the Diploma Board or with the English or Irish Institutes. (For fees, see below.)

Part II of the Diploma

The conditions of entry into Part II of the Diploma have been changed in these ways:

(a) Candidates may be able to take the examination earlier than in the past because many will have acquired

- sufficient practical experience at about the age of
- (b) Exemption from the Part I examination will, in future, be granted to those members of the participating bodies who were over the age of 30 on January 1st, 1966, instead of over 40 as in the original Diploma scheme. Those members of the English and Irish Institutes who were successful in the 1966 and 1967 examinations for the Certificate in Management Information will be eligible to proceed to Part II without further examination in Part I.
- (c) Experience in non-manufacturing organizations (e.g. commerce or the public service) will be acceptable. The emphasis previously was on experience in manufacturing industry.
- (d) In future, appropriate experience at somewhat below the level of 'chief accountant' (see below) will qualify.

Part II will continue, as at present, to consist of an oral examination on the candidate's experience, followed later by a further interview at which the candidate will present a thesis.

What the award of the Diploma means

The award will signify that the holder is equipped, in terms of technical knowledge and practical experience of management accounting, to assume an appointment:

In industry or commerce as the principal financial executive (e.g. chief accountant) of a medium-sized company; or as a financial executive with comparable responsibilities in a larger organization;

As a consultant able to operate without detailed supervision, to investigate problems in the field of management accounting, to install all kinds of management information systems, and to compile and present reports to clients at board level;

In the public service as a financial executive with responsibilities comparable to those defined above; and that he has the qualifications and experience to advance to a senior management position at a later stage in his career.

Fees

The fees are £21 for the C.M.I./Part I, £10 for exemption from Part I (where applicable) and £75 for Part II. Fees paid by individuals may be allowable for tax and those paid by employers are recoverable from certain of the Industrial Training Boards.

Further information on the Certificate in Management Information may be obtained from the English and Irish Institutes and on the Joint Diploma from The Joint Diploma Board, 73 Cheapside (Fifth Floor), London EC2. Telephone 01-236 6654/6684.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Building Society Interest

SIR, – I confirm the point made by Mr Eisner in your issue dated March 9th, namely, that the 'true' rate of interest on a repayment mortgage is higher than the nominal rate. The benefit to the building society is, however, nothing like '20 per cent of the official rate' which he quotes.

On a twenty-five year loan at 7·125 per cent, the equivalent 'true' rate of interest calculated on calendar monthly balances is 7·256 per cent. Where such a mortgage is discharged after ten years the 'true' rate would be 7·200 per cent.

Yours faithfully,

N. E. GRIGGS, Secretary-General, THE BUILDING SOCIETIES ASSOCIATION:

London WI.

SIR, - Mr F. Eisner's letter (March 9th issue) indicates that all building societies charge interest for the year on the balance owing at the beginning of the year, despite the fact that principal repayments are made monthly throughout the year.

This is not strictly accurate. The Civil Service Building Society calculates mortgage interest on the reducing monthly balance and I can call to mind several others which operate in the same manner.

Your correspondent also suggests that the 'annual rests' method of interest calculation can give the building society an additional benefit of up to 20 per cent over the official rate. He has evidently overlooked the fact that building societies are long-term lenders. The vast bulk of their lending is on terms of twenty to twenty-five years, and according to my calculations the current rate of  $7\frac{1}{8}$  per cent per annum charged on monthly reducing balances is equivalent to about 7 per cent charged on annual rests. The extra benefit accruing to building societies who charge on annual rests is therefore equivalent to  $\frac{1}{8}$  per cent, or less than 2 per cent of the quoted rate.

Yours faithfully,

R. S. B. PHILLIPSON,

General Manager,

CIVIL SERVICE

BUILDING SOCIETY.

London SWI.

SIR, - I was most pleased to read a letter written by Mr F. Eisner in your March 9th issue on the subject of monthly instalments to building societies because this question has been a bone of contention with me for the last twenty years.

I have written both to building societies and to the Building Societies Association but received the usual unsatisfactory reply.

The obvious way to avoid the additional unquoted interest, which accumulates to many hundreds of pounds over a period of a normal mortgage because the capital outstanding is maintained higher than should be the case, is to retain the moneys in one's own possession and make a total payment at the end of each building society year. Building societies calculate the interest once a year and, therefore, the affect on the balance of the account will be the same as when monthly instalments are made. However, I would appreciate any comments on the legalities of taking this stand.

In this context it is interesting to note that most building societies calculate the interim interest at the date of disposal of the property, or if a bulk sum is paid off in excess of the normal mortgage commitment at the date of payment, and if this can be done under these circumstances it seems reasonable to expect that a recalculation should be made every time a normal payment is made.

Yours faithfully,

Flackwell Heath, Bucks.

R. G. PAYTEN.

Companies Act Shortcomings

SIR, - Mr Shearman appears (March 9th issue) to have misunderstood the points raised in my earlier letter in your issue of March 2nd, to the same extent to which he appears to have misunderstood certain provisions of the Companies Act themselves.

There is no point in Mr Shearman talking of giving companies six months after the end of their financial year as 'a period of grace' in which to file their accounts, when the 1948 Act allows the longer period of almost eleven months. As I see it Mr Shearman's proposed alteration of the time allowed for the filing does not affect the enforcement of the provisions one iota. It is not unnatural therefore to assume that Mr Shearman is not only unaware of the provisions of section 148 of the 1948 Act, but has insufficient practical experience in the preparation of accounts to realize that those who are engaged on their preparation have a far more complex task than those whose interest in those accounts is restricted merely to their interpretation for the purpose of assessing credit worthiness.

In connection with the enforcement of the disclosure provisions, the Registrar has always under the 1948 Act taken steps to remedy any omissions from a company's file if anyone searching that file notifies him of the fact, and I can see no reason why he will not continue to do so under the 1967 Act.

Yours faithfully,

Cheam, Surrey.

DENNIS E. COX, F.C.I.S.

Decimal Currency

SIR, – As a supporter of the  $\int_{\mathbb{R}}/d$  decimal system approved by Parliament, may I add my comments to those of Mr D. Garbutt (February 10th issue) and Mr N. A. Walker (March 2nd).

There is no doubt in my mind that  $65\frac{1}{2}$  pence should be £0.655 and all machines should be capable of printing in this way. An obvious advantage would be to have a movable decimal point so that when the halfpenny (£0.005) is killed by inflation, the decimal point can be moved one space to the right, thus increasing the capacity of the machine by an extra column of whole numbers.

With regard to Mr Walker's point, it appears to me that by adopting the 10s unit, all existing transactions which are 5 or over in the first figure would need an extra column of whole numbers, since they would all be doubled, e.g. £4.9 would be £9.8 but £5.1 would be £10.2. As indicated in the previous paragraph, there is every prospect of the halfpenny being killed by inflation within a reasonable number of years, but if the ros unit was adopted it would presumably last for ever or thereabouts.

Mr Walker's comment on standardization has a certain touch of humour in that £1.0 sterling is equivalent to 1,499 lire. The decimal places can be dispensed with if all internal accounting is done in 'round pounds'.

Yours faithfully,

W. W. WILLIAMS, F.C.A., F.C.W.A.

Cyncoed, Cardiff.

Wasteful Tax System

Mr Aidan Crawley's Stern Words at Sheffield Dinner

RADICAL reform of Britain's 'wasteful' tax system was advocated by Mr Aidan Crawley, former M.P. for West Derbyshire, when he spoke in Sheffield on March 8th.

Addressing members and guests at the annual dinner in the Cutlers' Hall of the Sheffield and District Society of Chartered Accountants, Mr Crawley referred to the letter sent by the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Mr W. E. Parker, to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, calling for a three-point plan for the rationalization and simplification of the U.K. tax system.

Proposing the toast to the Institute, Mr Crawley, who is chairman of London Week-end Television Ltd, said people relied on accountants and sometimes, indeed, feared them. Mr Parker's letter did not surprise him. Anyone of any political party who sat through any Finance Bill could be under no delusion about the complexities of the fiscal system. But when accountants found difficulties, he thought the matter was serious.

Mr Crawley said the present fiscal system was wasteful. And because it was so wasteful he believed it was apt to be demoralizing. He hoped Mr Parker's efforts would succeed in persuading the Government, or any successor to it, to introduce reform.

Once or twice during a century, countries threw up great men, Mr Crawley went on. People were prepared to follow such men but he did not believe that any country could sit back and wait for one man to lift it out of its difficulties.

Any country that went on hoping someone would come along who would give them the inspiration they were themselves incapable of finding, was in decline. He thought there were signs we were running into that danger.

Replying to the toast, Mr Parker said many members told him the Institute should do a great deal more to project the image of the profession. But it had to be remembered that unlike the C.B.I., or the T.U.C., or any other trade association or trade union, the Institute's job was not merely to look after the interests of its members, but to watch over the quality of the service members rendered to the community.

Nevertheless, the Institute was putting in its oar wherever it felt it could properly do so. Besides the recent letter to the Chancellor, representations had been made to the Fulton Committee on the Civil Service pointing out that the Government directly and through the nationalized industries was now responsible for spending an enormous part of the public product; and whereas in the private sector of industry there were perhaps 20,000 or 30,000 qualified accountants, in the Government sector there were only places for 350, and even among these there were eighty-five vacancies.

Mr Parker said it was clear they had to press on to try to bring home to the community at large, and to the Government in particular, that their profession had special skills which were of great value.

Throwing their weight about was not the task with which their Royal Charter charged them, but he said he would risk venturing a personal opinion. That was that the competence of management in British industry, which at its best was by far the best in the world, on average required a great deal of improvement – and their profession had much to offer in that respect.

The toast to the guests was proposed by Mr J. K. Patrick, F.C.A., President of the Society, in the chair; Mr J. H. Shelmerdine, D.F.C., President of the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers, responded.

OBITUARY

William Phillips, O.B.E., F.I.A., F.S.S.

As noted elsewhere in this issue, it is with regret that we record the death on March 7th, at the age of 75, of Mr William Phillips, O.B.E., F.I.A., F.S.S., barrister-at-law, who was known to readers as a contributor to The Accountant over a period of many years.

Mr Phillips became a Fellow of The Institute of Actuaries in 1913, having qualified at a very early age. During the First World War, while serving as Adjutant in an anti-aircraft unit in Birmingham, he invented a predictor which was not outdated until shortly before World War II and he was awarded the O.B.E. for his work.

Between the wars, Mr Phillips worked in insurance, becoming general manager in Great Britain of The Manufacturer's Life Insurance Company of Canada. Although he was called to the Bar in 1928 he did not start practising as a barrister until 1946. He soon became a pension scheme specialist and in 1957 wrote Pension Scheme Precedents.

In 1964 he was awarded the Gold Medal of The Institute of Actuaries 'in honour of actuarial work of preeminent importance'. This work was, in fact, on the curve of deaths, resulting in a new, important light on the study of mortality statistics. Earlier, in 1936, he showed how the adoption of the binary scale would simplify enormously the work of a computer and, many years ahead of his time, demonstrated a computer he had designed - this apparatus is now in the Science Museum, at South Kensington. He also worked on the design of the ACE computer in 1944 and 1945.

A prolific writer, Mr Phillips had forthright views which he put over in a pungent and interesting manner.

THE CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

At a recent meeting of the management committee, with Sir William Carrington, President of the Association, in the chair, seven new applications were considered and grants made in six cases. One application was from the widow of a member in practice with three sons, one of whom is an articled clerk; a grant was made to help her until her son will have completed his service under articles.

Twenty-five applications for the renewal of grants were considered and the grants were renewed, many at higher rates, for a further year.

Special fund

Two grants were renewed for a further year.

Changes in circumstances

Thirteen cases were reported in which circumstances had changed during the last three months. Adjustments were made in certain cases and in others donations were made. It was decided to nominate one beneficiary for a flatlet in one of the housing schemes of the Hanover Housing Association.

THE CHANGING BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT

Lyons Lecture

The changing business environment' is the subject of a lecture to be given by Mr G. C. Rowett, F.C A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., M.I.O.M., director and general manager, Times Newspapers Ltd, at Stationers' Hall, Ave Maria Lane, London EC4, on Monday, March 25th.

Sponsored by J. Lyons & Co Ltd for the Institute of Office Management, the lecture will consider some of the many changes which are taking place in national, sociological and technical influences in businesses, and the possible effects now and in the future on the organization and management of businesses, together with the implications on training and development of executives. Since the war not only has the rate of change in technological developments been increased but also that of the management skills and sciences. The development of able company executives becomes that much more difficult unless not only the specialist skills are acquired but also the broader appreciation of the total management requirements. An even greater diversification of skills and techniques is likely to take place in the future, making business management an in-

NEW SCOTTISH ONE POUND NOTE

The Royal Bank of Scotland issued last Monday a new one pound note (illustrated above), the size of which is appreciably smaller than the one in current circulation.

The reduced size is exactly the same as the proposed new Bank of England one pound note for issue after the introduction of decimal currency in 1971. The basic colour of the Royal Bank note is green which also conforms with Bank of England practice.

A portrait of David Dale, agent of the Bank's first branch in Glasgow, appears on the face of the note and there are engravings of the bank's head offices in Edinburgh and Glasgow on the reverse side.

When considering a Merger three heads are better

A good merger should not be a regret-table necessity but a welcome form of progress. For many a small or medium sized company, competing against bigger rivals, profitable rewards can come from merging with another company in the same or a complementary line of business. The advantages—rationalisation of production and distribution, shared research and experience, greater financial strength—can mean all the difference between continued progress on the one hand, stagnation on the other.

Effecting the right merger with the right partner at the right time is a delicate and expert task needing the services of a third party. That is why Industrial Mergers Ltd. has been established.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is a subsidiary of Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation. With its own special knowledge plus the backing of I.C.F.C., it has unequalled experience in the small and medium sized company sector of British industry and possesses financial resources to provide the funds which are often necessary to realise the full potential of a merger.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is impartial. Our sole interest is to arrange a merger of genuine benefit to both parties. Negotiations are absolutely confidential.

If you think we can help your clients please write to Mr. E. R. Izod, Manager, Industrial Mergers Ltd., or to the Manager of any ICFC Branch Office throughout the country. If he feels the time is not yet ripe he will tell you so. If he thinks your clients would do better to stay independent, he can help you safeguard their independence.

C. S. DEVERELL

Head of the Department of Management Studies
Letchworth College of Technology

Between 1951 and 1965 in nearly every year more than 20 per cent of young people went into clerical work. This is one of the cogent reasons for reviewing the management of our offices and the men and women who staff them.

Are our offices as effective as they could be? What is the real cost of providing office services? What is the calibre of the newcomers? How does one select them? How are they trained? What job satisfactions do they get? How can ability be recognized and rewarded?

The coming into force of the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 has led to a re-examination of working conditions. The implementation of the Industrial Training Act 1964 is likely to become an important issue. The selective employment tax has reinforced the need to examine costs and efficiency. Similarly, the tempo of the revolution in the quality and quantity of information data and its processing poses equally urgent questions.

Here is a book which reviews all these problems. The author writes from a background of many years in offices and as many in professional, commercial and office education. Above all, he is concerned with the human beings at the desk and the machine.

His book will provide managerial and supervisory staff with stimulating leads on the human side of office management. Students preparing for the examinations of The Chartered Institute of Secretaries, The Institute of Office Management, The Corporation of Secretaries, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, and the relevant subjects of business or management diplomas in colleges will find that it contains a wealth of information attractively introduced. It is a book for the library of every training and personnel department and it complements the same author's Business Administration and Management.

ACCOUNTANTS OR GRADUATES

Around £4,000 p.a.

An engineering company of international repute in South London wishes to recruit two executives responsible to the Group Financial Controller as follows:

Chief Financial Accountant

A Chartered Accountant is required for this newly-created post. Procedures to be covered include payroll, cash, purchase, sale and nominal ledgers, capital expenditure control, consolidation and review of information from subsidiaries and control of taxation. The staff of these departments amount to about 80. The work covers a wide range of subjects arising from the interpretation of management reports and calls for the exercise of considerable personal initiative.

Systems and Audit Manager

A qualified accountant or graduate is required to develop this newly-created post occasioned by the increasing complexity and diversity of activities. His tasks are to review, formulate and implement improved accounting and administrative procedures and techniques in the Group's factories and Head Office.

The computerisation of the company's manufacturing procedures has accentuated the need to change established systems and introduce improved standard costing and control methods. He will work closely with an advanced but still developing computer installation and will have a small select staff.

He must have experience and appreciation of up-to-date systems and computer developments, have the ability to think constructively and determination to ensure that management has reliable and appropriate information on profit improvement and cost reduction opportunities. Prospects for advancement in these and allied areas are excellent.

Applicants, preferably in their mid-thirties, who feel they have the right qualities for these challenging opportunities should forward brief particulars to Box AO 629.

SENIOR COST CLERK

Young man (22 to 30 years) required to make an effective contribution with a team engaged in the installation, development and operation of marginal costing, integrated accounts and budgetary control by computer. At least student membership of I.C.W.A. desirable

The department is in an expanding situation and prospects could be interesting. The salary is commensurate with the duties and is supplemented by fringe benefits. Please write giving brief details of career to:

TATE & LYLE

Extracts from the statement by the Chairman, Mr John Lyle, at the A.G.M., Wednesday, March 20th, 1968.

- Pre-tax profits of £9.5 m. equal the highest yet reported. The recovery in 1967 came principally from exports and shipping.
- Exports to a value of £15.2 m. showed an increase of 22%.
- Devaluation must force up the price of many foodstuffs but sugar will be largely unaffected thanks to the Commonwealth Sugar Agreement, which fixes the price in terms of Sterling for the largest part of our supply.
- The Transport Bill a bad piece of legislation will add £85,000 a year to the cost of home trade sugar distribution as well as adding materially to the cost of some of our engineering exports.
- A £3 m. investment in the French sugar industry is an important preparation for U.K. entry to the Common Market, as well as a promising investment in its own right.

If you prefer to use the latest equipment without owning it

UDT Leasing is for you

Thousands of go-ahead industrialists see no particular merit in simply owning machinery. What matters to them is its profitability. Good profitability depends on using the best, up-to-date machinery. Problem: buying outright means tying up valuable capital. Answer: lease the equipment through UDT. No deposit is necessary and the rentals (which are tax deductible) reduce as the equipment gets older. You can budget ahead with confidence because the terms are not subject to change and your existing credit lines remain open. There are many sound arguments for leasing—especially through Britain's biggest finance company, UDT.

The Budget

WHAT many will regard as the sharpest sting of the Budget speech on Tuesday was certainly in the tail, for it was almost at the end that Mr Jenkins announced his new impost on investment income which he has called a 'special charge'; no doubt to distinguish it from the 'special contribution' imposed by Sir Stafford Cripps just twenty years ago. The special contribution was said to be a once-for-all contribution. This is perhaps another reason for adopting a different name this time.

The first £3,000 of investment income in 1967-68, after deducting the personal allowances allowed for surtax, will be exempt from the special charge. Thereafter the rate of charge rises rapidly: 2s in the £ on the first £1,000, 3s on the next £1,000, 6s in the £ from £5,000 to £8,000, and thereafter at the top rate of 9s in the £.

This special charge is expected to raise £100 million in a full year and this, of course, will be paid by a comparatively small number of individuals. Although theoretically it can be paid out of income in the lower ranges, the Chancellor recognized that in the higher ranges there would be a charge upon capital. Once more the Government will be collecting people's capital in order to spend it as income – a curious way of reducing spending power.

The special charge would seem to be a sop to those who have been advocating an annual wealth tax. As the Chancellor recognizes, such a tax would be quite impracticable at present because of the problems of valuation which would be involved. However, the special charge is imposed for one year only, although Mr Jenkins was more cautious than to call it a once-for-all charge; he said it could be repeated at long intervals. In the meantime he hinted at further exploration of the taxable capacity of those who possess wealth which, he said, should be differentiated from that of those who depend primarily on wages and salaries. He even offered a hint that if wealth, as such, could be taxed, then it might be possible to reduce the highest rates of tax on incomes.

At long last the Government has now conceded the point made from all sides that it is wasteful and uneconomic to impose capital gains tax on very small gains. As from 1967–68 inclusive, the gains of an individual are to be exempt if, after deducting losses, they do not exceed £50 for the year. This should save a vast amount of calculating in the case of the majority of taxpayers, whose capital transactions are comparatively minor.

The CHANCELLOR turned his face against any increase in the rate of capital gains tax. He accepts the long-term view of the rate. He also accepts that by its nature capital gains tax is not suitable for a short-term and limited surcharge. This would only produce all the distorting affects of reluctance to realize during the period of the surcharge, with a possible fall in the immediate yield.

A welcome change is the proposal to amend the computation rules on disposals, after March 19th, 1968, of quoted shares and securities acquired before April 6th, 1965. These investments will no longer be 'pooled' with similar assets acquired since April 6th, 1965; it will be necessary only to compare their acquisition costs with their value as at that date. Moreover taxpayers will be allowed to elect, once and for all, to disregard the actual cost of their pre-1965 holdings of equity shares taken as a whole, and to base their gain or loss solely on April 6th, 1965, value. There will be a similar election available for fixed-interest securities.

By a splendid understatement, Mr Jenkins said that he hoped that these changes would save taxpayers, their professional advisers, and the Inland Revenue, a certain amount of effort at small cost to the Revenue. The plain fact is that not only do the calculations demanded by the Finance Act 1965 impose great burdens, there are very few people who can understand what the provisions of the Act really mean. On the debit side, the so-called 'neutral zone' exemption in respect of certain Government securities is to be withdrawn in the case of short-term gains tax.

It is a matter of considerable relief that the Chancellor has not proposed any increase in the rates of direct taxation beyond the  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent increase in corporation tax as from April 1967 already announced. Mr Jenkins is not nearly so set, as some other members of his party, against indirect taxation. He accepts that there is strong evidence for the belief that nearly all sections of the community would rather pay at the point of sale than through deductions from the pay packet. The Chancellor also accepts that indirect taxation does give the taxpayer some choice. By the practice of abstinence the taxpayer has a ready and respectable means of tax avoidance.

Finally, the CHANCELLOR gave somewhat grudging recognition to the argument of the disincentive effect of high direct taxation. He pointed to the experience of the more successful competitor economies abroad where, in general, total public expenditure—and hence the total amount raised by taxation—is in line with that of the United Kingdom. He admitted that direct taxation on earned income in Britain is higher, and he even went so far as to admit that the rates of tax on earned incomes might indeed be too high. In short he was looking to increases in indirect taxation to bring the necessary additional tax.

What the CHANCELLOR did concede was that high rates breed a relentless search for loopholes. He expressed a preference for lower rates and fewer loopholes. He then went on to announce the closing of certain loopholes in estate duty. The five-year period for inter vivos gifts is extended to seven years, and the provisions for tapering introduced in 1960 are to operate only after the fourth year. The change applies to deaths occurring after March 19th, but gifts made more than five years before that date will not be caught.

As might have been expected, non-aggregable life insurance policies – so much advocated by purveyors of life assurance for their tax benefits – are now to be aggregable. This change also operates for deaths occurring after March 19th even though the policies may have been taken out before that date. Another loophole to be closed concerns discretionary trusts – a loophole 'opened by a recent decision of the Courts'. No doubt the Chancellor was referring to the case of Gartside's Will Trusts (1967 T.R. 309).

In the corporation tax field, Mr Jenkins dealt a death blow to the recent popular device of offering share-holders the option of either a cash dividend or a bonus issue in lieu. For those who took the bonus issue, this device avoided both standard rate income tax and surtax. In future if an option is offered, the liability of the shareholder will in all cases be calculated as if he had taken the cash dividend.

The Government wishes to clarify the position as to transactions in 'know how'. Receipts from such sales will be treated as income except where 'know how' is sold as an element in the disposal of a business. In that case the charge will be to capital gains tax. A new capital allowance will give relief to the purchaser over six years if he cannot get relief under the present law.

As from March 19th, 1968, post-cessation receipts of barristers and certain other professional men are to be taxable. However, the blow is softened for those advanced in years. Anyone aged 51 on April 6th, 1968, will be entitled to receive 5 per cent of his last year's earnings tax free. The percentage will be increased by five points for each additional year of age up to 75 per cent. Thus a practitioner who is 65 or over on April 6th, 1968, will be able to take 75 per cent tax free.

Of late there has been a surfeit of lurid advertisements of tax avoidance schemes involving life assurance relief. This fact was commented upon by Mr Jenkins in announcing the Government's counter-measures, and he gave an indication that if a policy is to qualify for life assurance relief it will have to run for a minimum period of ten years; there must be a reasonably even spread of premiums; and the capital sum payable on death must be at least 75 per cent of the total premiums payable under the policy. If the policy does not satisfy these conditions, not only will the premiums be disallowed for income tax relief purposes, but there will be a surtax charge on the proceeds, less the premiums paid.

Capital redemption policies taken out by individuals will be subject to the same charge, and the charge will also apply where a policy which satisfied the qualifying conditions is surrendered in the first ten years of its term or before three-quarters of the term has expired, whichever period is shorter. The existing provisions for disallowing relief from surtax for interest on borrowed money which is used to pay premiums on life assurance policies are to be strengthened.

The somewhat meagre allowance for married men is being further cut down in relation to the first tax year of marriage. If a man has not married by May 5th in the tax year (i.e. in the first month) then he cannot get the full married man's allowance for that year but only a proportion on a time basis. In logic the same thing should have been applied to the child allowance but this has not been done, possibly because wedding days are more easily chosen than birthdays.

However, the child allowance is to be reduced by £36 for each child for whom family allowance is due for the whole year 1968-69 and by an appropriately smaller amount where the child qualifies for only part of the year. The new P.A.Y.E. re-coding will come into effect in the P.A.Y.E. week beginning on April 27th, 1968. One side effect of the change is to bring some 300,000 additional people into the charge to income tax.

Beginning with 1969-70 the investment income of infant children is to be aggregated with that of their parents. Why earned income is not to be aggregated was not stated.

There is to be one small concession. The total income exemption limits for persons aged 65 and over are to be raised for 1968-69 and subsequent years. New figures will be £415 for single persons and £665 for married couples.

There is to be a change in the provision for levying interest on income tax, surtax, corporation tax and capital gains tax in arrear. In the case of those taxes which become due on or after July 1st, 1968, the period within which the tax can be paid without carrying interest is to be reduced from three to two months.

With such very slight increases in total direct taxation, it can be imagined that the increases in indirect taxation must be considerable and this is in fact the case. A new purchase tax rate of 50 per cent came into force on Wednesday, and applies to a very wide range of those goods previously taxed at 27½ per cent, including furs, gramophone records, cameras, diaries and cosmetics. All the other goods previously taxed at 27½ per cent now pay 33½ per cent. At the same time the 11 per cent rate went up to 12½ per cent, and the 16½ per cent rate went up to 20 per cent. Tape recorders, so long exempt, are taxed at 33\frac{1}{3} per cent. Prerecorded tapes, and still and cine-projectors join cameras to pay 50 per cent. The tax on petrol has gone up by 4d a gallon and the vehicle licence duties are raised substantially.

Although selective employment tax has been attacked from all sides – even Mr Jenkins admitted that it was 'not a wholly popular tax' – it is certainly not to be dropped yet. Indeed it is to be increased by 50 per cent with effect from September 2nd, 1968. However, the tax is to be reconsidered. In the meantime, there are to be two modifications: effective rates for part-time employees will remain and will be extended to full-time employees over the age of 65.

The present  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent duty on betting is doubled to 5 per cent and the pool betting duty on football pools and fixed odds football coupon betting goes up from 25 to  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. Gaming licence charges go up very substantially, the largest casinos paying £75,000 per annum. Although the beer tax is unchanged, spirits go up by 2s 6d a bottle, fortified wines by 1s a bottle and table wines by 6d. Cigarette duty is up by 2d per packet of twenty, with a corresponding rise for other tobaccos.

Altogether the Budget was perhaps not so bad as was feared; certainly it could have been worse.

Gold Fever – Another Great Depression?

"HE move to dual rates by which transfers between central banks is to continue at $35 per ounce while other buyers have to pay a free market price for their gold, is only a temporary expedient; the gold crisis still contains an extremely ominous threat. JACQUES RUEFF, the eminent French economist and adviser to DE GAULLE, fears the world may quickly panic itself into another Great Depression. Supplemented by later decisions, it was President ROOSEVELT's decision in January 1934 to increase the U.S. Treasury's price of gold by 75 per cent to a fixed rate of $35 per ounce which ended the world's last slump. Nearly all prices have since more than doubled, yet the official dollar price of gold has remained unchanged. The American view is clear: any suggestion that the price should be raised either to meet the needs of international liquidity or for any other reason - is entirely unacceptable to the U.S. Treasury or, for that matter, to most American students of international finance and many other formulators of public opinion. The PRESIDENT considers it a matter of both personal and national prestige.

Despite the overt backing of most of the world's other great trading nations, however, this time-hallowed stand is becoming increasingly untenable. M RUEFF asks whether it is really possible to imagine that this responsible nation (the U.S.) will continue to expose the whole world to the horrors of a new Great Depression merely to maintain the outdated fetish of a gold price arbitrarily fixed thirty-four years ago in conditions which have vastly changed with the growing cancer of the gold-exchange system.

Apart from prestige considerations, why do the Americans refuse to change the official dollar price for gold?

The first and most important objection relates to the distribution of the benefits and disadvantages among nations. A gold appreciation would obviously mainly benefit South Africa and the Soviet Union, the main producers, and this is clearly undesirable on political grounds. Moreover, because of the very uneven distribution of gold reserves among nations in a way which bears no relation to either their real economic strength or their importance in world trade, any revaluation uncomplicated by a negotiated adjustment process would result in a severe distortion of world markets as well as being extremely inequitable. One major aspect of this problem is the fact that the less developed countries of the world hold only 6 per cent of the world's gold reserves though they are responsible for 21 per cent of the world's trade.

The second objection is that while a minor change in the gold price would not meet the situation, a major change could well spark off a forest fire of rapid world inflation. Already smouldering in the United States itself under the escalating pressure of the Vietnam war, it could quickly flare up there and simultaneously in France and other countries which not only have disproportionate holdings of the world's reserves but also harbour rapacious gold hoarders. A cash-in of the $4,500 million worth of gold thought to be hoarded by French citizens could play havoc with the monetary stability that France has achieved at considerable cost in terms of lost production over the past decade.

The third major objection is that any change in the official price of gold would further undermine confidence in the dollar as an international currency. With sterling also under suspicion, the consequences for world trade could be dire.

The world is at a critical juncture in its monetary affairs. It has arrived at this point partly through sterling's devaluation but, more importantly, by the continued rapid flow of dollars from the States to Europe as the result of the Vietnam war and the large scale of American foreign aid and investment. With, up to last week-end, roughly $500 million worth of gold draining away into private hands each week and consequent gold pool claims on its members, the American gold stock has probably fallen below the $10,000 million level thought crucial to confidence and U.S. short-term liabilities to foreigners now exceed the U.S. gold stock by 50 per cent. This situation has been covered by the Washington agreement which, in effect, means that the other gold pool countries are prepared to see a third of their gold drain away in exchange for dollars of dubious future value (though, of course, they do not want to have this happen).

The situation may be further relieved by prompt American action. The long-delayed 10 per cent tax surcharge combined with last Thursday's removal of the 25 per cent gold cover for the domestic currency issue should, for the moment, do the trick. But only the elimination of the American balance of payments deficit can provide a lasting solution. Even this must entail a curtailment in the expansion of world trade.

The next probable expedient (in the less than immediate future) is to demonetize gold. This could be done simply by the U.S. Treasury refusing to sell it even to central banks. The dollar would still be acceptable as a trading currency though on a narrower basis and at a lower and probably fluctuating level.

The probable demise of the dollar as an international reserve currency would accelerate the need for a more rational and equitable form of international liquidity. This might well be met entirely by the existing International Monetary Fund tranche positions expanded by the special drawing rights whose basic form was negotiated last year at Rio. Gold is endowed by DE GAULLE with an almost metaphysical value as the basis for international exchange. But, in these new circumstances, this glittering metal might lose all its value above that inherent in its industrial and personal use. Those with gold fever now might then be suffering from burnt fingers.

Scottish Institute's Progress

THE Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland has come a long way since the far-off day in 1853 when eight visionaries met 'to bring about some definite arrangement for uniting the professional accountants in Edinburgh'. For one thing, the membership has increased from eight to over eight thousand and the activities now conducted by the Institute cover a range which could not possibly have been contemplated by its founders.

In contrast, and for those who complain about the current subscription levels, the ordinary annual rate a century ago was two guineas as against eighteen guineas today for practising members which demonstrates that, taking into account falling money values and the greatly extended variety of services available, the affairs of the Institute are conducted both economically and efficiently.

Ample proof of this is contained in the 1967 report of the Council now to hand, and from which there are extracts on other pages of this issue. The total income of the Institute for the year was £171,471 and of this considerable sum nearly two-thirds was expended in maintaining professional standards by means of recruiting, training and examining apprentices, research, Institute publications and library aquisitions.

The surplus on the year's transactions of £7,149 was transferred to the general funds which now amount to £125,259. This figure is arrived at after including heritable property at less than the 'book value at December 31st, 1951, with additions at cost' and quoted investments 'at cost' and would undoubtedly be substantially greater if current values were substituted.

Of the many statistical tables which the report provides, the only disturbing one is that giving the intake of apprentices. Only 370 were indentured during the year ended July 31st, 1967, the lowest total for the five years reported. The Institute holds two examination sessions – spring and autumn – the second being primarily for candidates who failed at the spring session. Of students who presented themselves for one or other or both sessions last year, well over 80 per cent passed in Parts I to III of the examination. The percentages for Parts IV and V were 68 and 71.

In recent years the Council's report has had much to chronicle in the way of post-qualifying education activities and 1967 was no exception. A full-time director was appointed to look after this exciting new development and courses held during the year dealt with analytical techniques, computers and appreciation of management techniques, as well as professional subjects like auditing and taxation.

An even more ambitious and varied programme has been planned for 1968 and it is worthy of note that subject to the balance at each course being held in favour of members of the Institute, these courses are open to members of kindred accountancy bodies and also to any other person nominated by a member of the Institute.

Deservedly, but perhaps a little unexpectedly, the Council finds itself with a current 'best-seller' in the shape of the booklet – published within four weeks of the passing of the Act – entitled The Companies Act 1967 – Some Requirements and Implications. So far, 14,000 copies have been sold and the success of the publication stems from the fact that it not only highlights the changes in the consequent problems they create but also how these difficulties should be approached.

In his foreword to the report, the President, Professor D. S. Anderson, M.A. C.A., draws attention to the disappointing response to the questionnaire issued to practitioners by the Institute last autumn calling for confidential information on professional charges.

Professor Anderson rightly describes the apathy shown towards the inquiry as 'disquieting' and points out that if economic fees are not being charged the rewards of practitioners will be eroded by rising costs and, in turn, this would be a deterrent to future recruitment, a problem already preoccupying the minds of members of the Council.

Plain Talking to the Chancellor

THERE could hardly be a more devastating indictment of the direct tax legislation of the last few years than is contained in the memorandum submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer by the four bodies constituting the Accountants Joint Parliamentary Committee, from which extracts are reproduced elsewhere in this issue.

The contrast between the incisive and detailed points made in the memorandum and the vague ministerial pronouncements one usually reads, hardly needs stressing here. Perhaps it is because accountants know what they are talking about when it comes to direct taxation, whereas so many official spokesmen merely pass on explanations and reasons supplied to them.

The memorandum rightly places in the forefront the anti-avoidance legislation with which all taxpayers are now saddled. Anyone having close connection with the world of business knows how much time has to be wasted on investigating the tax repercussions of even the most innocent of transactions. Mr Jenkins would do well to reflect on the extract quoted in the memorandum from Lord Upjohn's speech in C.I.R. v. Bates ([1967] 2 W.L.R. 60) about the 'monstrous result' of section 408 of the Income Tax Act 1952 and his lordship's criticism of the fact that although this was pointed out in the House of Lords sixteen years earlier, the law still has not been changed.

Instead of a change in the law for all to see, there is an unpublicized concession under which the Inland Revenue operate section 408 in what the Revenue consider to be an equitable way. This, as Lord Upjohn says, they have no power to do; and it is highly unsatisfactory that taxpayers should be at the mercy of administrative decisions of the Inland Revenue, with the corollary that they have no recourse to appeal hearings if the discretion is exercised against them.

Even more regrettable is the way in which the so-called anti-dividend-stripping section 28 of the Finance Act 1960 is applied by the Revenue to a very large number of cases which have only a remote resemblance to dividend-stripping. It was pointed out by Lord Upjohn himself in C.I.R. v. Cleary ([1967] 2 W.L.R. 1271) that there is a built-in safeguard in the section in that a taxpayer contemplating a transaction in securities can 'inform the Inland Revenue of his intention and can get a ruling from them as to whether, in their opinion, it falls within the ambit of section 28'.

There are two comments that can be made about this.

Section 28 (10) does not oblige the Inland Revenue, in fact, to say whether or not the transaction falls within the mischief of the section. It merely requires them to say whether or not they are satisfied that the section does not apply. So they can, and very frequently do, confine themselves to saying that they are not satisfied that the transaction is outside the section. The taxpayer is then no better off; and applying for a clearance does not impose any time limit on the Inland Revenue as it used to do under the old surtax direction provisions.

The other comment on his lordship's dictum is that, possibly unknown to him, the Inland Revenue are invoking section 28 in a large number of cases where, for example, binding agreement to sell shares was made before April 1960 and therefore before the parties to the agreement could possibly have applied for a clearance under an Act which was not then even published.

In order to avoid the difficulties put in their way by the proviso to section 28 (1) (transactions carried out before April 5th, 1960) the Inland Revenue seize on practically anything which happens after that date as being a 'transaction in securities', e.g. payment of part of the purchase money for the shares. They do this, notwithstanding the fact that such payment has to be made pursuant to the earlier contract.

It is high time that these matters were fully ventilated. Parliament as a body seems to be virtually incapable of understanding the Finance Bills which are put forward by the Government, drafted at the behest of the Inland Revenue who are thus able to dictate the provisions.

Another source of grievance is that the Acts impose fixed statutory limits in respect of sums of money which the Government then devalues by its policies. As the joint memorandum points out, it is now twenty years since legislation was passed imposing Schedule E tax on benefits etc. received by company directors or by employees earning £2,000 a year or more. In those twenty years the buying power of £2,000 has fallen sharply. As the memorandum says, that and other limits ought to be raised to have some regard to the change in the value of money.

The arbitrary limit on directors' remuneration paid by close companies (imposed on the footing that the remuneration is admittedly incurred 'wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade') was far too restrictive even in 1965. In the year 1968 it has become ludicrous.

Draft Scheme on Future Development of the Profession

THE Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has announced that proposals for the development of the accountancy profession in Great Britain and Ireland will be posted to members in July 1968. The proposals are the result of discussions which have been taking place between representatives of:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland;

The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants;

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; and

The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants.

District societies are being asked to convene meetings during September, October and November when representatives of the Council will be available to hear members' views and answer questions about the proposals. If these meetings, and similar meetings to be held by the other participating bodies, indicate that there is general support for the proposals, a special meeting of the Institute will be held in 1969 when members will be asked to vote upon the proposals in principle and, if thought fit, to authorize the Council to prepare the necessary changes in the Royal Charter and by-laws for their implementation. This procedure is designed to ensure that members have time to study the proposals and to discuss them before they are asked to vote.

Until a detailed scheme is issued in July, announcements have of necessity to be brief and framed in very general terms. It is therefore hoped that when members receive the scheme, they will examine it in full and then raise any points of principle at one of the many meetings which will be held throughout the country.

The Association's Examination Results

OF the 5,424 candidates who sat for the December 1967 examinations of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, 1,165 (21 per cent) were successful. The names of those who passed in sections III and IV are given on other pages in this issue.

In section IV there were 615 candidates of whom 115 (19 per cent) passed. First place was won by Mr B. A. Atitso, of Walsall, second place by Mr G. J. Holbourn, of Staines, and third place by Mr R. V. Clarke, of London.

A total of 1,506 candidates sat for section III of whom 192 (13 per cent) were successful. First place was awarded to Mr P. Mann, of Norwich, second place to Mr S. Lalloo, of London, and third place to Mr E. J. Hutson, of Ashford.

There were 1,122 candidates for section II of whom 344 (31 per cent) passed, and in section I a total of 2,003 sat, of whom 432 (22 per cent) were successful. In the Preliminary examinations 77 (59 per cent) of the 131 candidates passed.

Taxation Treatment of Foot-and-Mouth Compensation

AFTER somewhat protracted negotiations the National Farmers' Union has reached agreement with the Inland Revenue and the Ministry of Agriculture about the taxation treatment of compensation received by farmers for the slaughter of their animals during the recent outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease.

With regard to the profit element in the compensation, i.e. the excess of compensation over the book value or the purchase price in the year of slaughter, for all stock except mature animals of a production herd (for which an election for the 'herd basis' has been or can be made) the farmer may choose between bringing the whole profit into the account covering the date on which the animals were slaughtered (the normal position), or spreading it over the following three years in equal amounts. This, of course, is subject to modification where the farmer ceases to farm before the three years are up, or if he changes his accounting date.

This arrangement will cover mature animals in a production herd not eligible for the 'herd basis' election under section 23 of the Finance Act 1953 (i.e., where the number of slaughtered animals is less than 20 per cent of the total number of mature animals in the herd), as well as young stock and followers in the herd, flying flocks and animals kept for fattening.

The Union considers that the arrangement will go a long way towards easing the tax burdens of the farmers concerned, but it is pointed out that if a farmer who could elect for the 'herd basis' chooses not to do so, the spreading arrangement will not apply for the mature animals in question and the compensation paid for them will all be brought into the account covering the date on which the animals were slaughtered.

National Income Estimates

THE now traditional White Paper Preliminary Estimates of National Income and Balance of Payments (Cmnd 3571) covering the period 1962-67 provides no surprises. Gross national product in 1967 totalled about £34,000 million, equivalent to some £615 per head of the population. The increase over 1966 in the G.N.P. was 4 per cent in money terms; this compares with an average increase of over 6 per cent in recent years. When the money figures are adjusted for changes in the purchasing power of the £, the increase in the G.N.P. in 1967 was only 1 per cent.

Total domestic income was 4 per cent higher than in 1966; this overall figure conceals only minor differences. Thus income from self-employment of £2,615 million rose by only 3 per cent, while income from employment at £23,265 million was  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent higher on the year. Company profits rose from £8,477 million in 1966 to £8,818 million last year, while dividends on ordinary shares fell slightly to £1,610 million from £1,685 million. In contrast, payments of tax and additions to tax reserves by corporate bodies increased from £1,057 to £1,276 million in 1967.

In the current account of the central government, taxes on income increased between 1966-67 from £4,449 million to £5,090 million, though in contrast, taxes on expenditure yielded a less expansive return, from £4,243 to £4,524 million. National insurance contributions have remained virtually unchanged between 1962-67 at over £160 million. Redundancy payments in 1965 were only £1 million; in 1966 the figure was £18 million and last year it rose to £34 million. Over the same period national insurance benefits paid out rose from £1,775 to £2,088 million. An even larger increase was recorded in current grants to local authorities, from £1,249 million in 1965 to £1,700 million last year. In 1962 these totalled only £926 million.

Consumer expenditure of £25,168 million in 1967 was £1,024 million up on 1966; one of the largest percentage increases in the constituent groups was that of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent on alcohol, but cars and motor cycles accounted for £896 million, an increase of  $11\frac{1}{2}$  per cent over 1966.

Budgetary Economics

THE Economic Report on 1967, which served as the background for the Chancellor's Budget proposals, states that 1967 was 'a very difficult year for the U.K. economy'. The measures taken since devaluation to strengthen the economy are noted but there is no inclination to assume that any significant improvement in the underlying situation has yet been achieved.

In fact, the longer-term benefits of devaluation have not yet even begun to emerge. 'Time', notes the official review of the economic situation, 'will be needed for the full benefits of devaluation to show themselves in higher export volume and a slackening of growth in imports'

But the short-run reactions are clear. Between October and January, import prices rose 8 per cent and wholesale prices of basic materials and fuel by 9 per cent. In contrast, retail prices increased by less than r per cent and it is clear that further increases in domestic prices must soon be increasingly felt.

Throughout the year consumer durables — in particular, cars — have been in demand. There has been an increase in total hire-purchase debt in each successive month since June last year. It is noteworthy that the decline in industrial investment was, at 3 per cent, far smaller than the 10 per cent drop expected by the Board of Trade at the end of 1966.

The latest overseas trade returns make evident the statement that 'import and export figures are now showing strongly the initial effects of devaluation, which are strongly adverse'. The statistical analysis and review of the U.K. balance of payments for 1967 and, in particular, the disastrous fourth quarter (of which details are awaited in the March issue of Economic Trends), form the basis of the Chancellor's budgetary policy. The deficit on current and long-term capital accounts widened in 1967 to £540 million, which, after allowance for the balancing item, is probably reduced to £475 million. Half or more of that deficit can be attributed, notes the Economic Report, to special factors.

While output rose in the fourth quarter of 1967, unemployment has declined, albeit gradually. Wages, however, continue to push upwards; there was a rise of over 2 per cent in the index of hourly wage rates.

Certainly the review of the events of 1967, even as seen through official eyes in the Economic Report, provides little cheer; it is only to be hoped that the slightly more encouraging note in the latest assessment of the economic situation which is expected to be reflected in Economic Trends will be borne out. Even so, as the Budget address made clear, there is a long way to go.

Lawful Evidence for Appeal Commissioners

APPEARING in person in the High Court on March 12th, a taxpayer was able to persuade Mr Justice Goff to remit his stated case to the Special Commissioners for them to determine the precise terms of an agreement between him and Turner & Newall Ltd, of which company he had been a director.

Mr David É. Buckley was appealing against assessment to income tax on money paid to him from February to December 1965 by the company. He claimed that his contract with the company ended on February 28th, 1965, and that the payment for the period thereafter until the end of the calendar year was compensation for loss of office and not taxable. The Special Commissioners dismissed his appeal, relying apparently on a company minute which had said that he would remain with the company in a consultative capacity and to train his successor.

Mr Buckley told the High Court that he knew nothing about this minute and that certain letters put before the Special Commissioners were not admissible evidence. His lordship said that in the circumstances and the interests of justice the case would, as stated above, be remitted to the Commissioners.

It was made clear to Mr Buckley, reported The Financial Times of March 13th, that the course of remitting the matter to the Special Commissioners might result in his incurring considerable costs.

Temporary Interruption Not Permanent Discontinuance

Section 130 of the Income Tax Act 1952 provides for certain consequences when a trade is 'permanently discontinued'. The question whether or not the trade has been permanently discontinued is one of fact which nevertheless can give rise to a good deal of argument with the Inland Revenue. There is a suspicion in the land that the Revenue tend to argue much more strongly for cessation when the trade is owned by a company which has losses or capital

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

WHEN I first came to my present job there was a big old leather-covered book with strengthened corners lying in permanent state on the central table in the main office. It was entitled in letters of gold Counting-House Manual of Procedures. The pages were creased and well-thumbed, with numerous 'addenda' sheets interspersed, and little clusters of junior clerks were often to be seen arguing in whispers beside it.

Several weeks passed before I found time to examine it. It turned out to be a dictionary-cum-encyclopedia of all the book-keeping operations in the office, first written-up about 1920, up-dated at sporadic intervals thereafter, and specifying in the minutest of detail every step in every transaction. Since the day that some long-gone office manager had penned the first entries as a labour of love, it had kept countless budding but bewildered young accountants on the straight and narrow path.

The chapters dealt with all possible contingencies in numbered steps. There was 3/5 Journal:

'All entries shall be entered in ink and the originator shall initial the entry. If there is more than one originator, then . . .'

or 14/9 Permanent Assets:

Expenditure resulting in permanent retention of, or extension of, or improvement or addition to, an identifiable asset . . . ', and bank reconciliations, wages make-up and so on received similar treatment. No newcomer landed with an unfamiliar responsibility need ever worry about his performance when he had the counting-house manual there to guide him.

However, with the passing years, it had become obsolete. No matter how often new seniors had rewritten and interleaved: 'Foreign exchange requirements' or 'Dividends, treatment of tax', etc., the regulations had changed yet more often. The introduction of punched cards had been drastic in impact and gradually the old manual had given up the unequal struggle and resigned itself to oblivion.

Still, the underlying theory had been excellent. Our staff suffers regular attrition due to age or resignation for outside jobs, so we have a steady flow of raw recruits. In addition, our policy of rotation involves re-training sessions for juniors (too often of the 'sit-by-Nellie' method) so streamlining was important. A modernized version had undoubted merits . . . at length I decided to consult Frank, our internal auditor.

Frank, I was pleased to see, agreed wholeheartedly. Leave it to him, he urged. The scientific approach of the modern raduate would revolutionize our outmoded concepts of basically primitive indoctrination. He'd fix up something outstanding, a flexible master plan, loose-leaved, illustrated with diagrams in colour, easily reproduced . . . just wait and see.

With some little misgiving I let myself be persuaded, and weeks passed while Frank was almost buried in masses of foolscap sheets. At length he emerged proudly. See here, he said, and our senior accounting staff gathered round eagerly.

His brain-child was undoubtedly brilliant. He'd drawn up a series of flow-charts in poster colours, all in work study symbols of triangles and bars and cubes. 'Blue always represents cash or cheques,' he explained, 'so this dot-in-circle represents the cashier's lodgement. The stippled arrows are departmental cash-points accumulating twice daily to sub-cashiers, so obviously this deep-blue square reconciles with the purple segments in direct sales and in sundry debtor control. It's quite simple.'

We nodded rather cazedly. It was certainly simple when he'd explained it the third time, though I personally have never quite understood the checker-board wages calculation breakdown. Anyhow we distributed some copies as a trial run, since when little clusters of seniors have been seen arguing in puzzled disagreement; but the juniors avoid them like the plague. So much for the modern approach.

allowances to carry forward and the share capital of that company changes hands. The existence of losses for carry-forward and the sale of the share capital are not by themselves relevant, of course, but they do seem to affect the official attitude.

This month, a claim by a company for loss-forward relief was vindicated in the High Court, notwithstanding that the company had failed to persuade either the Revenue or the Special Commissioners. In J. G. Ingram Son Ltd v. Callaghan the company for years had manufactured glass and rubber products for medical purposes. Plastics being superior to rubber in this field, the company's trade fell off, a receiver was appointed and the factory sold.

An industrial holding company bought the share capital and the trade was moved to premises belonging to another subsidiary of the holding company. Experiments were made with plastics and in May 1961 the company ceased to use rubber. However, losses continued and again the factory was sold and all the company's employees except one were paid off. In June 1962, Plastage (Sussex) Ltd bought the company's issued capital and the plastics plant was moved to one of Plastage's factories which the company rented. Thereafter the company manufactured parts out of plastic.

It was found as a fact that the trade carried on was the same trade as that carried on in September 1961, in the sense that the company was doing the same things but with plastic instead of rubber. The Special Commissioners went on to find, however, that (in view of the interruption) the old trade was permanently discontinued in September 1961. Allowing the company's appeal, the High Court held that the trade was still the same and the company was entitled to loss forward relief.

A Turning Point in the Nation's Fortunes

by JOHN DAVIES, M.B.E., F.C.A., J.Dip.M.A. Director-General, Confederation of British Industry

The address at last week's luncheon meeting of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants.

AT the present time we are faced with a national problem and one which has an impact on every sector of our community. The problem is visibly seen to start at the moment of devaluation, not because devaluation was really a new beginning — I do not think it was — nor because, unfortunately, was it a certain end, but because it was something of a turning-point in the nation's fortunes which has a significant message for everybody.

It is idle, I think, to look upon devaluation as a technical device by which you change the pattern of your performance – much as a car would change it by changing from a higher gear to a lower one – and that by virtue of the mechanical forces deployed, the result is automatically acquired. This is not at all the secret or the story of devaluation. The story of devaluation is one of a long-term; progressive decline; of failure to grasp – I do not mean simply the Government's but within every sector of the community – the realities of post-war Britain, and to grasp them in a way which sought to put an end to the weaknesses which led inevitably towards the culmination of November 18th.

It is quite inadequate to try and look constantly to an area of the community to blame for the defeat, which in some sense devaluation was. It was a curious defeat in so far as it could, if only it will procure the necessary revival of mind and of action in all sectors of the community, also prove to be the beginning of a more prosperous era for the country.

If we abstain for a moment from looking at the faults of others but look at our own faults – I talk in industrial terms – then one can see certain outstanding things which during the whole of the post-war period, industry has been negligent about. Negligence which has contributed, perhaps to bad management policies on the part of the Government; perhaps to the bad implementation of financial policies – to a number of things – towards the decline which culminated on November 18th.

The kind of things which I think industry must blame itself for are in some ways very much part of its erstwhile strength, and I think they flow to a very large degree from the lethargy of change – if that is the right expression – at least reticence to change, which is implicit in the industrial world of Britain.

Defects in industrial enterprise

In looking at the turning-point of November 18th, it is necessary to go back and see that these reticences were never more fully exemplified than by the defects, in certain areas of our industrial enterprise. I will select three of them, not because there are not many more but because I think all three of them have some particular pertinence to the accountancy profession. Moreover, I think all three could call forth a display of energy and help from the profession which could have a profound impact on the future performance of British industry.

The elements I am concerning myself with are these—first, our investment record since the war has been in marked contrast with that of our Continental and other competitors. Investment in British industry has been at a low level—a low level by any standards for a country which sought to maintain itself at the summit of industrial enterprise throughout the world. It is no good blinking the fact that our shortfall of investment has had a profound effect upon productive capacity in recent years.

The second and no less important one has been our failure to realize that the need to expand and upgrade and then well utilize our forces of manpower is at the very basis of our problem. We emerged from the war and from our immediate post-war recovery with an undoubtedly high quality of manpower and, in comparative terms, with a degree of intactness in our skill which few other countries, certainly in Europe, could equal.

We matched this in that period by a high level of rewards in real terms compared with the rest of Europe, and we have seen that quite considerable advantage steadily eroded until we can, with some justice, be called a low-wage community. Here again is a story of decline in our industrial policies which I think are of fundamental importance to our whole national revival.

The third, and probably the most difficult of all, has been our attitude of mind to the acquisition of profit. The acquisition of profit, even among industrialists, has been allowed to gain a kind of opprobrium which is entirely unjustified and entirely at variance with the realities of the need for profit.

I mention these three because I believe in all these respects there has been a singular shortfall in our own performance in the post-war era and a shortfall which from now on we must be at pains to remedy. In saying that I believe the profession has a considerable contribution to make to this remedy, I realize all too well that the profession on its side has been encumbered with manifold difficulties.

Not the least of these difficulties has been the ignorance on the part of those who prescribe our fiscal arrangements of the immense burden they were putting on a part of the community which, had they been liberated therefrom, could have brought to bear a degree of professional skill and advice which would have been of the greatest importance to industry. I find that the failure to realize the administrative consequences of complex legislation seems to be a permanent feature of Government. The immense cost of complexity is one which in our present circumstances we can certainly ill-afford.

Investment

To return to my three areas. First, investment. The truth is that although there are many companies – far-seeing and competent companies – who make the most careful appraisals and assessments of their investment policies (although there are even smaller concerns today which are beginning to use much more sophisticated means of calculating the real advantage they may gain by making investment), in the concept of investment as being the whole basis upon which industry advances is still remote; it is not at all deeply dug into industry.

The thought that no piece of equipment and no building and no piece of plant is sacrosant, that simply because it has not been fully depreciated over fifty years it is not ripe for replacement, is still, I am sorry to say, not sufficiently prevalent all through industry. It seems to me absolutely tragic that a country like this, which reposes itself upon very good engineering and has perhaps the highest levels of maintenance in the world as a whole, should have used these qualities to persevere in maintaining equipment and plant in use which should long ago have been dispensed with. This, indeed, is one of the characteristics which one witnesses in practically every section of industrial enterprise and I believe it is an area in which the accountancy profession really has a contribution to make.

I know from my brief period in practice that it is part of the profession's belief that it should not intrusively enter into work into which it is not invited; but I do hope that the intrusiveness will be pushed to the limits of what you consider to be professional integrity, because I am absolutely certain you have a tremendous role to perform with the many industrial concerns with which you are at grips, in forcing their attention to replace plant and installations in the light of profitability and not in the light of whether or not they are still maintainable assets. This, I think, is a fundamental problem to which we must try to seek some solution. Our level of investment in terms of efficiency and comparability with the rest of Europe is still dropping astern and the moment of devaluation represents, for this particular purpose, a fundamental turning-point.

Manpower

I turn now to the question of manpower. Britain will have to produce, in ten years' time, a substantial increase in total national product if existing living standards are to be maintained. The reason is simple; it is that we will have virtually an identical working population in ten years' time as we have today. The increase in the working population between now and ten years' time will be negligible, but it will have to sustain a much greater dependent population because the population will have substantially increased.

By the most simple mathematics one can see that to maintain an equivalent standard of living with the same manpower and a bigger dependent population will require a considerable additional out-turn from the working population. This, in manufacturing terms, will be aggravated by the fact that the steady movement of working people from productive and manufacturing activities to service and clerical ones will be continuous. So, in fact, the number of people engaged in manufacturing industry ten years from now will be substantially smaller than it is today.

It will also, no doubt, have to compete with a natural desire of the country to maintain, or nearly maintain, its position in the league table of living standards with other comparable countries throughout the world. This will mean that in ten years' time we shall have to produce in this country half as much again as we do today with a smaller working population. This is a formidable task and one which will require not only the immense effort in investment to which I have already made reference, but an equally great effort in terms of the improvement of the skills of the working population and, above all, in the improvement of their use.

Skill problem

The skill problem is one which I think considerable action is being taken now to remedy. We have been, perhaps, a little slow in starting; but by-and-large we are certainly not behind-hand by reference to our Continental equivalents. The forward movement in skills in every sector of industrial enterprise is growing fast. The big problem will be in making sure those skills are properly used, and in this respect, again, I ask the profession to consider whether it has not some real contribution to make.

Ever since I was a young accountant, I have always been appalled by the fact that whilst every other constituent of the firm's assets and its prosperity figured in the balance sheet, that of the staff did not. It always seemed to me to be an irrational process that this important asset was one which had no place whatever in the company's balance sheet. I think this is further reinforced by the fact that the effective cost of that asset is continually rising.

The impact of the Industrial Training Act, the provisions for the redundancy fund, the additional social services of all kinds contributed by the concern, represent a continuing increase in the effective cost of manpower to the firm and yet the cost is never represented as being a continuing factor. It is there as a profit and loss factor written off year by year and, in fact, never perpetuated; so the effective damage done to the concern by the misuse, and therefore the loss, of skilled manpower is never really detected in financial terms. I hope sincerely that the profession will turn its attention to this matter. It is necessary to bring home to industrial management the need for conservation of this immense asset within their own concerns.

Profit

The third area to which I would like to address myself is profit. There has been, in more recent years, something of a change of mind on the significance of profit. There has been, I believe, a greater understanding abroad of the fact that profit in itself does not at all constitute the disagreeable and predatory element — a necessary consequence but possibly an inescapable one — in the industrial forum. This is an unhappy line of thought which, I am afraid, was all too prevalent a few years ago, but which is now perhaps quietly on the way out. It needs a very sound push. The requirement of profits in this country is very great.

Again, our level of profits and thereby our level of industrial savings, have not been as high as they should have been in order to sustain the kind of investments which we should have made. The whole thing is part of a vicious circle. Investments have been too low, so the profits have been too low; so the investments have been too low, so the profits have been too low... and we have been going round in this unhappy, closed, tight, and incompetent circle. This must be broken up.

The breaking up of this can, I think, be enormously helped by the proper representation by companies of their profits and of the use they have made of them. I find that whereas from time to time the exact origin and the reasons for a reduction or increase in profits are elaborated, the effective use which is made of the husbanded resources of the concern are rarely put forward in a comprehensible form to the world at large.

This again is a field in which the accountancy professional can really help to make people understand they are not dealing with some outmoded element of a past society but something which is at the very foundation of the new industry. I hope the profession will address itself to this particular problem.

The Great American Accounting Principles Controversy

by KENNETH S. MOST, LL.B., F.C.A.

Accounting in the U.S.A. is accompanied by an extensive and apparently interminable public debate on the subject of generally accepted accounting principles. One of its features is the active participation of practising public accountants in attempting to formulate and develop accounting theory — evan to the extent that two of the largest public accounting firms were led to a polemic on the subject of deferred taxation conducted, as were the great political polemics of the last century, through privately printed and distributed broadsheets. This article attempts to trace the history of the search for generally accepted principles in the U.S.A. and to show how public accountants became deeply involved in it.

PRIOR to the 1930s, interest in accounting theory was scarcely more marked in the U.S.A. than it was elsewhere. One may mention in this connection W. A. Paton's outstanding contributions, particularly his doctoral thesis entitled 'Accounting Theory', and those of other academics to The Accounting Review, whose most distinguished editor, A. C. Littleton (1943–47), was a regular contributor on this subject for over twenty years.

During this period, also, it became common for practising public accountants to contribute articles to The Journal of Accountancy and of course some of them had a theoretical bent; in this connection the name of Maurice Peloubet springs to mind.

The critical event, or series of events, which precipitated an American preoccupation with accounting principles were the stock-market crises of 1929–31. In the recriminations which followed the huge losses suffered by millions of investors, public accountants were not spared a share of the blame. It was alleged that misleading accounts had been published and financiers and investors could point to one apparent indicator, namely, the fact that accountants had different ways of reporting what were, on the face of it, identical situations. It was not hard to find other evidence to support criticisms of the public accountant.

The need for protection for the investing public was expressed by the accounting profession no less than by the Stock Exchanges and the Federal Government. The American Institute of Accountants (A.I.A.), as it then was, set up a special Committee on Co-operation with Stock Exchanges under the chairmanship of G. O. May, of Price, Waterhouse & Co, which undertook to clarify the public accountant's position in a correspondence later published in extenso in May's Twenty-five Years of Accounting Responsibility.

The May Committee put forward the view that balance sheets do not show values, the real value of assets being their earning capacity. Hence, emphasis was placed on the income statement, or profit and loss account. Annual assessment of earning capacity in order to value assets was both impossible and unprofitable, so that a body of conventions of balance sheet preparation had been adopted, partly based on theory and partly on practice.

While there was agreement on broad principles, there were differences in their application. The May Committee suggested that two alternatives were possible – either uniform accounting rules, which it rejected on the grounds that the arguments against were 'overwhelming', or every corporation to be free to choose its own accounting methods, subject to rules of disclosure and consistency.

Room for improvement

There was, nevertheless, room for great improvement and the May Committee specified five 'principles':

- (i) That income accounts should not include unrealized profit, realization being the consequence of an act of sale.
- (ii) That capital surplus (reserves) should not be used for revenue items of charge.
- (iii) That earned surplus (revenue reserves) of a subsidiary created prior to acquisition was not part of the consolidated earned surplus of the parent.
- (iv) That dividends paid by a corporation to itself in respect of holdings of its own stock (which is permitted in some States of the U.S.A.) should not be credited to income.
- (v) That amounts receivable from officers, employees and affiliated companies should be shown separately.

This modest list of principles was quoted with approval in a statement issued the following year by the President of the New York Stock Exchange (N.Y.S.E.) when it was announced that after July 1st, 1933, all applicants for listing must henceforth agree to have their financial statements audited and submit them on application (with the exception of certain railroads). The correspondence concluded with a draft form of audit report and The Accountant, on May 19th, 1934, commented favourably on the manner in which this result was arrived at, by co-operation between the A.I.A. and the Stock Exchange authorities, and not by legislative sanction.

Origins of short-form audit report

The correspondence mentioned includes a letter from the N.Y.S.E. Committee on Stock List to the Governing Committee of the N.Y.S.E. dated October 24th, 1933. This letter said:

'It would . . . be advantageous if audit reports were so framed as to constitute specific answers to the last three questions embodied in the (N.Y.S.E.) President's letter to listed companies of January 31st, 1933, namely:

- 4. Whether in their opinion the form of the balance sheet and of the income or profit and loss account is such as fairly to present the financial position and the results of operation.
- 5. Whether the accounts are in their opinion fairly determined on the basis of consistent application of the system of accounting regularly employed by the company.
- 6. Whether such system in their opinion conforms to accepted accounting practices, and particularly whether it is in any respect inconsistent with any of the principles set forth in the statement attached hereto'.

[i.e. the May Committee's five principles.]

The Revised Suggestion of a Form of Accountants' Report produced by the May Committee reads as follows:

'To the XYZ Company:

We have made an examination of the balance sheet of the XYZ Company as at December 31st, 1933, and of the statement of income and surplus for the year 1933. In connection therewith, we examined or tested accounting records of the Company and other supporting evidence and obtained information and explanations from officers and employees of the Company; we also made a general review of the accounting methods and of the operating and income accounts for the year, but we did not make a detailed audit of the transactions.

In our opinion, based upon such examination, the accompanying balance sheet and related statement of income and surplus fairly present, in accordance with accepted principles of accounting consistently maintained by the Company during the year under review, its position at December 31st, 1933, and the results of its operations for the year.'

The short-form audit report subsequently adopted by the A.I.A. for use by its members was as follows:

'Addressee

Date

We have examined the balance sheet of X Company as of December 31st, 19....., and the related statement(s) of income and surplus for the year then ended. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards, and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion the accompanying balance sheet and statement(s) of income and surplus present fairly the financial position of X Company at December 31st, 19....., and the results of its operations for the year then ended. in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.'

It appears, therefore, that the short-form audit report in use in the U.S.A. is in essence the product of suggestions made by a former President of the N.Y.S.E.

The Securities and Exchange Commission (S.E.C.) was set up in 1934 as a consequence of Federal securities legislation of 1933 and 1934. The S.E.C. was given the right to prescribe rules of accounting for corporations coming within its jurisdiction, and directed its chief accountant to draft a prescription for accounting practices. The approach was restrained, however, and the S.E.C. found it advisable to look to the A.I.A. to specify accounting principles and practices. Even so a considerable number of practical points were clarified in the S.E.C.'s Regulation S-X and in subsequent case hearings and accounting series releases.

The search for principles

Public accountants in the U.S.A. thus accepted an obligation to report whether 'accepted principles of accounting' had been followed and applied consistently, and it became a matter of some urgency to add to the list laid down by the May Committee¹. In 1935 the Haskins & Sells Foundation Inc. invited three outstanding academic accountants to form a committee 'to make an independent and impartial study' of accounting principles 'and prepare a report which will be given to the public'. The three were T. H. Sanders, Henry R. Hatfield and Underhill Moore, and their report was published by the A.I.A. under the title A Statement of Accounting Principles in 1938.

In its invitation the Foundation listed the reasons why such a study was required:

'Sharp variations among the statutes of the various jurisdictions have existed for some time. . . . Federal agencies have issued regulations involving accounting principles which have resulted in contradiction between agencies, and Federal regulations involving such matters conflict frequently with those of State regulatory bodies. The Stock Exchanges . . . the Federal Government . . . have raised sharply the question as to what are accepted principles of accounting . . . wide variations of opinion often exist among equally reputable practitioners.'

The committee 'made inquiry in four directions' (letter of transmittal), i.e. personal interviews and correspondence with 'competent persons'; a review of the literature; a study of statutes and decisions; and an examination of current corporation reports.

At about the same time, the Executive Committee of the American Accounting Association (A.A.A.) was at work on a similar project. The A.A.A. is an association of university teachers of accounting, its President at that time being Eric L. Kohler. Its Executive Committee included W. A. Paton (Director of Research) and A. C. Littleton. Henry R. Hatfield was a member of its advisory committee from which aid was explicitly 'sought and secured'.

Tentative statement

The A.A.A. published 'A Tentative Statement of Accounting Principles Affecting Corporate Reports' in The Accounting Review of June 1936. Its preamble stated:

'... the Committee has attempted to set forth some of the bases upon which accounting statements rest; it has not tried to establish the postulates of all accounting theory and procedure. The following should be regarded as an experimental formulation of principles.'

Comparison of these two contemporaneous publications reveals that they shared the view that generally accepted principles of accounting could indeed be identified. The main difference between them is one of approach. While Sanders, Hatfield and Moore were more comprehensive, they nevertheless appeared to be aware of the practical implications of their assignment so that they did deal with, and attempt to settle, a large number of questions. The A.A.A. Committee, on the other hand, started from this far-reaching basic assumption:

'The basic assumption made here is that a corporation's periodic financial statements should be continuously in accord with a single co-ordinated body of accounting theory, and that the purpose of the statements is the expression, in financial terms, of the utilization of the economic resources of the enterprise and the resultant changes in and position of the interests of creditors and investors. Accounting is thus [sic] not essentially a process of valuation, but the allocation of historical costs and revenues to the current and succeeding fiscal periods.'

It will be seen that emphasis on the solution of practical problems was to characterize subsequent pronouncements on accounting principles emanating from the professional body of public accountants, apart from one strange episode which will be dealt with in due course. Subsequent pronouncements of the A.A.A. have retained 'a single co-ordinated body of accounting theory' as a goal, but have in fact been mainly devoted to an attempt to liberate accounting theory from the unnecessary restriction contained in the second sentence quoted above, which can now be seen to aggravate irresponsibility rather than alleviate it.

Both sources, however, had the same objective — to improve financial statements by reducing alternatives — and they arrived at similar conclusions because they saw accounting principles as derived from accounting practice, in particular, the practice of cost/revenue allocation as distinct from valuation.

Although the development of ideas which subsequent publications of the A.A.A. contained is outside the scope of this article, we may note here that the Executive Committee published further statements in 1941 and 1948. A Committee on Concepts and Standards then took over the task, issuing eight supplements to the 1948 statement. A comprehensive statement was issued by this committee in 1957, and the four principal statements and eight supplements amended in 1964. The latest in the series is A Statement of Basic Accounting Theory (1966), representing a new departure.

The A.I.A. and the A.I.C.P.A.

In 1938 the American Institute of Accountants (now the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants – A.I.C.P.A.) created a Committee on Accounting Procedure to deal with accounting problems. (Prior to 1938 an Accounting Procedure Committee had been available to answer the questions of suitable persons.) This new standing committee was composed of twenty-one persons, each appointed for a term of one year, with a small (and diminishing) technical research staff.

In the twenty-one years between 1938 and 1959 the committee published fifty-one accounting research bulletins. These bulletins tended to present ad hoc solutions to unrelated specific problems tackled on an ad hoc basis, and they frequently recognized the acceptability of two or more procedures for accounting for identical transactions occurring under identical circumstances. Furthermore, the bulletins presented recommendations only; except for the six accounting rules previously mentioned, their conclusions were not binding on the members.

This situation proved unsatisfactory to some leading public accountants and an A.I.C.P.A. Special Committee on Research Program was formed in December 1957, and reported to Council in 1958². Its stated objective was to advance the written expression of what constitutes 'generally accepted accounting principles', general acceptance meaning acceptance by the leaders of the profession.

² Report to A.I.C.P.A. Council of Special Committee on Research Program, The Journal of Accountancy, December 1958.

For the first time a similar approach to that noted in the A.A.A. 1936 statement can be discerned. Research was to be conducted at four levels, involving the identification of postulates, principles and rules. Postulates were basic assumptions derived from the environment and, with principles, provided a 'framework of reference' on all fours, no doubt, with the A.A.A.'s 1936 'single co-ordinated body of accounting theory'. Rules were guides for the application of principles to specific situations, comparable with existing accounting research bulletins.

The report proposed the establishment of an Accounting Principles Board (A.P.B.) and the appointment of a director of accounting research; it went into some detail on the organization and administration of the proposals. The director of accounting research would initiate a study of basic postulates and another of broad principles; these studies would be 'informative, but tentative and not highly authoritative'. It would be for the A.P.B. to issue statements on generally accepted accounting principles.

Accounting principles board set up

The report was accepted by Council in 1959 and an Accounting Principles Board established, composed mainly of public accountants but with some representation from accountants in banking, industry and teaching.

Dr Maurice Moonitz, C.P.A., of the University of California, was appointed Director of Accounting Research (the capitals came after the Special Committee's report) and in 1961 the A.I.C.P.A. published Accounting Research Study No. 1, The Basic Postulates of Accounting. In the foreword, Dr Moonitz, stated that he published this accounting research study under his authority to circulate the results of the research activities of his staff:

'The responsibility for this study is that of the Director of Accounting Research and those who have been associated with him in the project. . . . The study does not necessarily reflect the views of the [Accounting Principles] Board, nor has it been acted upon by the membership or by the governing body of the Institute."

The following year the A.I.C.P.A. published Accounting Research Study No. 3, A Tentative Set of Broad Accounting Principles for Business Enterprises, by Dr Robert T. Sprouse, also of the University of California, and Dr Maurice Moonitz, C.P.A. Its foreword included a disclaimer similar to that quoted

The reaction of the A.P.B. was to cause to be printed, and circulated with the Tentative Set of Broad Accounting Principles, a statement in the following terms:

'In the opinion of the Director of Accounting Research, these two studies (No. 1 and No. 3) comply with the instructions to the Accounting Research Division to make a study of the basic postulates and broad principles of accounting. Prior to its publication,

Study No. 3 has been read and commented upon by a limited number of people in the field of accounting. Their reactions range from endorsement of the ideas set forth in the study of "Broad Principles" to misgivings that compliance with the recommendedations set forth by the authors would lead to misleading financial

'The Board feels that there is ample room for improvement in present generally accepted accounting principles and a need to narrow or eliminate areas of difference which now exist . . . there should be experimentation with new principles and new forms of reporting to meet these (changing) conditions. The Board believes, however, that while these studies are a valuable contribution to accounting thinking, they are too radically different from present generally accepted accounting principles for acceptance at this time.

'After a period of exposure and consideration, some of the specific recommendations in these studies may prove acceptable to the Board while others may not. The Board therefore will await the results of this exposure and consideration before taking action on these studies.'

According to Alvin R. Jennings, whose initiative lay behind the research project, 'The lack of immediate enthusiasm for these two studies (1 and 3) was largely responsible for a definite, if subtle, shift in the direction of the Board's efforts'3. There was a return to the practice of issuing ad hoc opinions on questions of practical importance raised in an ad hoc manner. And, since the principles laid down by Sprouse and Moonitz in Accounting Research Study No. 3 were 'radically different' from generally accepted accounting principles, there has been another attempt to inventory these à la Sanders, Hatfield and Moore, this time by Paul Grady, the second Director of Accounting Research and a former public accountant himself.

A measure of some significance

One interim measure of some significance may be noted. Following a controversy surrounding the publication of an opinion on accounting for the investment credit (investment allowance) the A.P.B. recommended to the Executive Committee of the A.I.C.P.A. that members 'be required to direct attention to any material variation between the accounting principles followed and principles which the Board has approved', and that departures from opinions be noted in audit reports. This was not accepted, but in 1964 the Council of the A.I.C.P.A. adopted, among other resolutions, one to the following effect. 'Generally accepted accounting principles' are those which have substantial authoritative support. Opinions of the A.P.B. constitute substantial authoritative support. Departures from accounting principles laid down in A.P.B. opinions and accounting research bulletins - when their effect is material - must be disclosed either as a footnote to the financial statements or in the audit report itself⁴.

Evaluation of present position

It would be a mistake to conclude from this that the A.I.C.P.A. has abandoned all attempts to arrive at a 'single co-ordinated body of accounting theory' and is content to look to current practice for the source of accounting principles. At least one leading practitioner and former member of the A.P.B., Mr Leonard Spacek, chairman of the public accounting firm of Arthur Andersen & Co, is actively engaged in continuing the public debate⁵.

It may have been that the membership of the A.I.C.P.A. was not sufficiently mature in 1962 to accept accounting principles with which it was not ready to conform; immaturity is often cured by the passage of time. The principles of Accounting Research Study No. 3 may not have been adequately researched prior to their publication and it may have been a mistake to look to academics, who do not share the responsibilities of public accountants, for the formulation of accounting principles applicable to the practice of public accounting. Nor has the pressure from the A.A.A. been relaxed, upon whose members lies the responsibility for teaching and interpreting 'generally accepted accounting principles' to virtually the whole of the next generation of accountants. Nor, again, have other pressures from the S.E.C., the Stock Exchanges, and the investing public generally shown signs of abating.

The appointment of Reed K. Storey as the A.I.C.P.A.'s third Director of Accounting Research brought to that office a man who had attempted to reconcile the approaches of the A.A.A. and the A.I.C.P.A., and future development of accounting theory in the U.S.A. may well lead to a combination of the best features of academic research and the experienced judgement of practitioners.

Reviews

The Companies Act 1967

by S. W. MAGNUS, Q.C., and M. ESTRIN, F.C.A.

Butterworth & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London. 85s.

The authors and publishers are certainly to be congratulated in getting out so comprehensive a work so expeditiously after the Companies Act 1967 became law. It is a very substantial and well-bound production of over five hundred pages, which begins with a review of the background to the Act consisting of a short historical introduction, proceeding to a lengthy review of the Jenkins Report which, of course, is the main source of the new provisions.

There follows a fairly lengthy summary of the new Companies Act, which is succeeded by the reproduced text of the Act, together with copious annotations. Statutes amended by the 1967 Act are reproduced, with the amendments shown in bold type. An appendix gives Board of Trade notes on applications for authorization to carry on various classes of insurance business in Great Britain; another contains specimen forms of accounts. There is also a brief and business-like index.

Corporate Planning: A Practical Guide

George Allen & Unwin Ltd, London. 40s.

Management thinking in the last ten or fifteen years has been largely technique-oriented, being devoted to the quantitative assessment of specifically limited business problems, such as optimum stock-levels, investment problems, etc. Each of these techniques has to some extent been at risk since, in many cases, the solution has tended to ignore consequential changes in other parts of the business due to the limitations of the problem area.

Management techniques will, however, only make their maximum contribution to managerial efficiency if they are applied within an overall plan for the business as a whole. It is in overall planning that this book makes a major contribution. Intended for directors and executives, it is an admirable introduction to the topic. Moreover it is clearly written and although starting from basic premises, it deals in some detail with the practical ways in which plans can be put into effect to achieve the company's objectives.

The pattern of the book is to deal first with the identification of the objectives of the business and the level of profit to be aimed at, it then goes on to discuss methods of determining the gap between this level and what is being currently forecast for the period covered. Finally there is an appraisal of the alternatives that are feasible to close the gap that has been defined.

It is interesting to note that the author is quite blunt in his assertion that every company has only one true objective – to make a profit. His logical analysis demonstrates quite clearly that all other possible objectives are subsidiary to this.

This reviewer's only quarrel with the author is in his too ready dismissal of return on capital employed as a measurement of profitability. Granted that it has deficiencies both in definition and comparability, but it may be a more fruitful method for the average director or manager to understand and apply than the alternative proposed. This alternative is a D.C.F. appraisal of shareholders' expectations as to dividends and capital appreciation. This sophisticated approach is difficult to put over to the average management and it tends to ignore the fact that because of tax differentials, the same pattern of dividends and capital growth have very different after-tax values for different groups of shareholders, e.g. the tax-exempt pension fund and the surtax payer.

Nevertheless, the book is very well thought out and written and should not be missed by those concerned with long-term planning.

Basic Auditing Principles

by ARTHUR W. HOLMES.

Richard D. Irwin, Inc., Homewood, Illinois. $7.50.

While many auditing textbooks in Britain, as elsewhere, have been inflicted upon students and accountants alike, and while auditing practice has progressed haltingly (in some areas) behind best American practice, the supply of authoritative and comprehensive textbooks on auditing has ever been limited.

The reader of Mr Holmes's volume will discover a wealth of useful material both in the adjustment of an auditor's approach and judgement to the developing nature and characteristics of the business world, and in the practical minutiae of auditing practice. Of particular value are the chapters on audit working papers, inventories, and examination of prime documents.

The plan of the book is to set forth audit objectives both in general and in each area of the audit. Throughout the work the properly applicable internal control features, field standards and necessary procedures are examined under each heading. Additionally, each chapter closes with a consideration of the proper and adequate disclosure in the auditor's report of unsatisfactory items.

Butterworth's Tax Handbook 1967-68

Butterworth & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London. 45s.

The tax practitioner having access to these familiar bright yellow volumes, finds it difficult to imagine how he previously contrived to cope with the never-failing stream of new tax legislation. The competing volumes from an official source are large, ponderous, heavy, and rarely up to date. This current volume includes, of course, the Finance Act 1967 and the necessary cross-references have been made.

It cannot be guaranteed that everything that had to be amended has in fact been altered, but after fairly constant use this reviewer has not found any errors. If this were an ordinary review there would be a great deal to say about the turgid and incomprehensible nature of the writing, but unfortunately the compilers of this excellent volume are not allowed to alter the texts of Statutes; if they were, there is no doubt that the text would be very much easier to read and to understand.

Silke on South African Income Tax

Fifth edition by A. S. SILKE, M.COM., PH.D., C.A.(S.A.), A.C.A. Juta & Co Ltd, Cape Town. R21.50.

This new fifth edition brings Dr Silke's well-known work up to date for 1967-68. The simple fact that the text of the book now runs to 1,300 pages illustrates the rapid growth in complexity of South African income tax, for the third edition did not even reach 800 pages. It would be naïve to assume there are to be no further developments and it is therefore of interest to the prospective purchaser of the book to know that it will be kept up-dated by means of perforated gummed amendment slips supplied free of charge. At the end of the volume there is the text of the South African Income Tax Act 1962, and of ancillary legislation. Ten Double Taxation Agreements are also reproduced, including two with the United Kingdom.

Memorandum on the Finance Acts

Accountancy Bodies' Joint Submissions to the Chancellor

Reproduced below are extracts from a memorandum of submissions on the Finance Acts made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on behalf of the Councils of the constituent bodies of the Accountants Joint Parliamentary Committee, comprising the English, Scottish and Irish Institutes of Chartered Accountants and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants. Copies of the full memorandum, which was discussed at a recent meeting with representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue, may be obtained on request from the offices of the respective accountancy bodies.

Anti-avoidance legislation

THE Councils of the accountancy bodies have considered the present state of the law governing 'tax avoidance', notably section 408 of the Income Tax Act 1952 and section 28 of the Finance Act 1960. They have noted paragraph 1090 of the final Report of the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income as follows:

'An expert body should be set up to examine whether any of the detailed provisions against tax avoidance are drawn too widely and whether they could be expressed with greater brevity and precision.'

Subsequent events, including the introduction of the capital gains tax, reinforce the need for such an inquiry; that the law on tax avoidance is both drawn too widely and expressed without precision appears clear from a review of judicial dicta in recent cases. Provisions which, it appears, Parliament intended should be directed against dividend stripping and bond washing (Attorney-General, July 6th, 1960, Report Stage, Hansard, column 600) have been used by the Revenue to attack totally different transactions.

The accountancy bodies draw attention to the case of C.I.R. v. Parker ([1965] I All E.R. 801) in which Danckwerts, L.J., observed in the Court of Appeal:

'Like the famous arrow shot into the air, it seems to have landed they know not where. The target was plain enough: it was the operation which has come to be known as "dividend stripping". The operation carried out in the present case was not of that character. It was a genuine and reasonable operation. . . .'

In Bates v. C.I.R. ([1967] 1 All E.R. 84) in the House of Lords, the following observations are relevant:

'Before I conclude, I must again draw attention to the very unsatisfactory state in which the law has been allowed to remain since the decision by this House in 1950 of Potts case. . . . But when the case was decided against the Crown nothing was done to amend the section. . . This case may well afford ammunition to that body of opinion which holds that redrafting of the Income Tax Act ought to be taken out of the hands of those at present responsible.' (Reid, L.J.)

result of giving effect to the true construction of the section, have in fact worked out what they consider to be an equitable way of operating it which seems to them to result in a fair system of taxation. I am quite unable to understand upon what principle they can properly do so and, like Lord Reid, I hope this matter may receive some consideration in the proper place.' (Upjohn, L.J.)

'I must, however, state my opinion that it seems clear that there are in several respects grave defects in section 408 (2) particularly with regard to the aggregation of income, which are overripe for correction. The Revenue has very fairly not taken advantage of these deficiencies which might indeed lead to exorbitant surtax claims but, in matters of taxation, administrative moderation, though not to be discouraged, is, except in the short term, no real substitute for legislative clarity and precision.' (Wilberforce, L.J.)

The accountancy bodies therefore express the hope that, in any review of anti-avoidance legislation, consideration should be given to the need for greater clarity, both of intent and expression, than at present exists. They also wish to draw attention to certain matters in the present law which appear unsatisfactory:

(i) Finance Act 1960, section 28.

Although the procedure precedent to the issue of a notice to the taxpayer under subsection (3) leaves intact his right of appeal to the Special Commissioners, it appears that the provisions of subsections (4) and (5) are biased against the taxpayer for the following reasons:

- (a) The taxpayer has no statutory right to be informed by the Commissioners of the reasons which lead them to notify him that they believe that section 28 applies to a transaction. It is submitted that this information should be available to him so that he may, if he wishes, refer to them in rebuttal or otherwise in any statutory declaration he may make.
- (b) The statutory declaration is available to the Commissioners when they prepare their counterstatement. The taxpayer has thus effectively disclosed his case to the Revenue, is left in ignorance of their reply and has no opportunity of challenging it, either in direct negotiations or by representations to the tribunal. It is submitted that the taxpayer should be in possession of all the facts put before the tribunal, that is that he should be in the same position as the Revenue.

(ii) Income Tax Act 1952, section 408.

No 'clearance procedure' is provided by this section. It is submitted that one should be introduced on the lines of that in section 28, but taking into account the suggestions made in paragraphs (i) (a) and (b) above.

Allowances and limits expressed in monetary values

- 2. The accountancy bodies wish to repeat the submissions made on behalf of the English Institute to your predecessor on December 3rd, 1965, that limits expressed in monetary terms in the taxation statutes have become devalued because of changes in real monetary terms. This is even more true in 1968. Many examples could be cited but the three set out below are considered by the accountancy bodies to illustrate the way in which the exempting or moderating intentions of the original provisions have been eroded by inflation.
  - (a) Expenditure on an industrial building or structure Income Tax Act 1952, section 271 (4).

If an extension (such as an office) is made to an existing industrial building at a time of higher costs, the expenditure thereon may be found to exceed one-tenth of the total cost though this might not have been so if the cost of the extension were expressed in the monetary costs prevailing at the time of the construction or acquisition of the original industrial building. It is again submitted that where such an extension takes place, the limit of one-tenth of total cost should be increased to take account of price level changes.

- (b) Form P.II.D (Income Tax (Employments) Regulations 1950) Income Tax Act 1952, section 160.
  - It is again submitted that for the purpose of returning expenses paid to employees, the emolument limit of £2,000 p.a., fixed in 1948, is now too low. If the intention of the figure of £2,000 p.a. in 1948 was to delimit those in senior or managerial positions, it is considered that a minimum of say £4,000 p.a. would be more comparable at the present time.
- (c) Retirement annuity premiums: self-employed persons. Finance Act 1956, sections 22 and 23.

Relief is granted in respect of annual premiums paid by self-employed persons to provide retirement annuities, on the basis of a percentage of the net relevant earnings subject to a maximum of £750-£1,125 depending on age. It is submitted that these limits should be revised to take account of present price levels.

Allowance of certain expenditure at present disallowed

- 3. In the view of the accountancy bodies, the fact that for taxation purposes certain expenditure of a perfectly proper commercial character is neither allowed in the computation of taxable profits nor treated as expenditure attracting annual allowances is anomalous, especially now that substantially all realized profits, whether of an income or a capital nature, are subject to taxation. They therefore suggest:
  - (i) Annual allowances should be given on all buildings including those leased which are used or let in circumstances such that the income arising is assessable to tax, irrespective of whether a 'trade' is carried on.
  - (ii) Subject to the normal tests for allowable expenditure,

- money laid out as penalties or compensation for the cancellation of onerous contracts should be allowed.
- (iii) Annual allowances should be given for expenditure for the acquisition of 'know-how'.
- (iv) The disallowance of expenditure under the decision in the Law Shipping case should cease.

FINANCE ACT 1965

Finance Act 1965, section 34 – Transfer of business on retirement

- 8. (a) The definition of 'chargeable business asset' in subsection (6) excludes 'shares or securities or other assets held as investments'. Accordingly, where a family company owns shares in a trading subsidiary, the chargeable business assets of the subsidiary would be excluded in calculating the relief due on the sale of the shares in the parent and in consequence the individual disposing of the shares in the parent might be denied the maximum relief he would have obtained had the chargeable business assets of the subsidiary been owned by the parent. (The price received for the shares of the parent would, of course, reflect, inter alia, the value of the chargeable business assets of the subsidiary.) In an extreme case, where a family business consists of one or more trading companies owned via the medium of a holding company, an individual disposing of shares in the holding company on retirement would not qualify for any relief at all. It is again submitted that the exempting provisions should be amended so that where conditions within the spirit of the provisions at present contained in section 34 are satisfied as regards a parent and subsidiary companies, including the case of a non-trading parent with trading subsidiaries, the relief should be applied based on aggregating the chargeable business assets and the total assets of the group.
- (b) The accountancy bodies repeat the submission previously made that an inequity may arise under this section in the case of the early retirement (for example on medical grounds) of an individual from a business which he has owned for a substantial part, but not the whole, of the ten-year period. It is suggested that a 'tapering' provision might be introduced to cover such circumstances.
- (c) The accountancy bodies submit that, where an individual dies shortly before the completion of the ten-year period, provision should be made for an appropriate portion of the reliefs set out in subsection (i) (ii) and (iii).

Finance Act 1965, section 48 – Tax on distributions etc. received by United Kingdom company

- 10. In connection with this matter the accountancy bodies repeat submissions previously made:
  - (a) that an election to carry back a surplus of franked investment income for set-off against distributions made in the preceding year should be permitted;
  - (b) that the principle of election for payment of dividends and charges on income gross (subsections (3) and (7)) should be extended to all distributions;
  - (c) that the right of election under subsection (7) not to deduct income tax in respect of interest etc. should be extended to charges on income paid by a resident subsidiary of a foreign parent company to a resident fellow-subsidiary.

Finance Act 1965, section 52 (1) – Allowance of charges on income

11. The provisions for relief for charges on income should, in the view of the accountancy bodies, be amended so as to allow for their deduction from the profits of the period of accrual provided that the payments are made within, say, one year of the end of the accounting period. The present system under which charges on income are not allowed until paid can cause hardship in the circumstances where the profits, though adequate in the year of accrual, are inadequate in the year of payment so that relief for the charges is postponed or, in some circumstances even denied, if insufficient profits are earned in the future.

Finance Act 1965, section 58 – Relief for trading losses other than terminal losses

12. In the opinion of the accountancy bodies it is illogical that whilst loan interest, royalties and other charges on income incurred for the purposes of the trade paid under deduction of income tax are allowed as a charge against profits for corporation tax purposes under section 52 of the Finance Act 1965 or can be carried forward as part of a loss they are not available for the purposes of a claim under section 58 (2) of the Finance Act 1965. Under income tax legislation it was necessary to deal separately with charges but this is not the case under corporation tax legislation as the income tax on charges is separately accounted for.

Finance Act 1965, section 65 and Schedule 17 as amended by Finance Act 1967, Schedule 11 (4)

- 15. It is understood that the Board of Inland Revenue have under consideration a review of the operation of this section. The following points are submitted as matters in respect of which the existing treatment may be anomalous and/or inequitable.
  - (a) A subsidiary company pays a dividend to its parent company part of which is paid under deduction of income tax to pass up franked investment income. The dividend is regarded as paid partly out of pre-acquisition profits.

Confirmation is requested that the taxed portion of the dividend may be regarded as paid first out of postacquisition profits and secondly, as to any balance, out of pre-acquisition profits.

- (b) (i) A subsidiary company issues additional capital or reorganizes its capital by making a bonus or rights issue of the same or a different class of shares. Under the provisions of section 65 the additional shares acquired are a new holding and dividends paid thereon are subject to the test of availability of profits after the date of the 'reorganization'.
  - (ii) A group reorganizes to introduce new sub-holding companies within the group or a new parent company of the group. The new holding company or companies are regarded as acquiring at the date of their formation the holdings in subsidiaries (which are part of the existing group).

In the cases described in (i) and (ii) above there is no change of ownership of the company or companies and there are no grounds for regarding a part of existing profits as pre-acquisition. It is submitted that the date of acquisition of a new holding of shares in a company or shares in a different company in exchange for shares in a company or a holding of shares transferred from one group company to another should be arrived at in accordance with rules similar to those which apply in connection with reorganization of share capital and conversion of securities in Schedule 7 to the Finance Act 1965.

(c) A company transfers a holding of shares to an associated company within the provisions of paragraph 4 (3) of Schedule 17 so that the time of acquisition of the holding is treated as being before April 6th, 1960.

Confirmation is requested that any dividends received from this holding will not be within section 65, instead of being within the section but having a date of acquisition some time before April 1960.

(d) The computation of post-acquisition profits for a period involves the division and aggregation or apportionment of the profits or losses or accounting periods. In the case of payment of an interim dividend before the end of an accounting period profits available at the date of declaration of the dividend may not be reflected in the profits of the accounting period by reason of exceptional and unforeseen losses arising after, e.g. currency devaluation.

It is submitted that in such exceptional cases, the taxpayer should have the option to require profits and losses to be apportioned on a basis which has regard to the particular circumstances if a time basis of apportionment is inequitable.

(e) The accountancy bodies regret that the mitigating provisions of Schedule 11 to the Finance Act 1967 do not extend to the capital gains aspect, but it is understood from a statement of the Chief Secretary to the Treasury that this point would be considered for the 1968 Finance Bill.

Whilst the accountancy bodies hold the view that their general submission on group treatment provides the only satisfactory solution they submit that the amount treated as a capital distribution should be deductible from the cost of the shares held, and should not be dealt with as the proceeds of a part disposal giving rise to an immediate capital gains situation.

Finance Act 1965, section 74 – Directors' remunerations: close companies

16. (a) The accountancy bodies wish to repeat the submission made in paragraphs 30 and 31 of the memorandum on the Finance Act 1965 submitted by the Council of the English Institute, as follows:

'In the opinion of the Council, limitations upon the amount to be allowed for the remuneration of directors (other than whole-time service directors) which are calculated by reference to arbitrary fixed amounts or percentages or profit are unjust. The Council reiterates its view that instead of such fixed limits, the sole test of the amount of remuneration to be allowed should be that which is wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade, having regard to the circumstances of the company and the services rendered by the director whether whole-or part-time.

'In the Council's opinion, this view is reinforced as a result of the introduction of the concept of "associate" into the close company legislation. As a result directors who under profits tax legislation would have ranked as whole-time service directors may be taken out of this category for purposes of the new legislation by reason of the number of shares held by their associates. In any case the Council considers that the maximum ordinary shareholding (with that of associates) of 5 per cent of the total ordinary shares beyond which a director cannot be treated as a whole-time service director, is far too low.'

- (b) The following two points in particular illustrate the hardship which results from the present law:
  - (i) In the case of a group of companies, where the parent company is a close company, a director devoting his whole time to the group companies may be devoting the majority of his time to the affairs of the parent company which is purely a holding company. The standard for his remuneration under section 74 (3), Finance Act 1965, may bear no relation to what would have been the allowable amount if the limitation of 15 per cent of the group profits had been operative. The right to elect for group treatment for corporation tax would remedy this and analogous cases.

- (ii) In the case of small private companies, the limits under section 7.4 (2) of the Finance Act 1965 (which may not represent excessive remuneration for wholetime directors who are not whole-time service directors) operate to exclude any allowance in respect of remuneration paid to a bona fide part-time director.
- (c) In repeating these submissions, the accountancy bodies wish to note three particular matters on which the present legislation seems particularly unjust:
  - (i) The inadequacy of the present limits.
  - (ii) The fact that if the allowances are wholly absorbed by the remuneration of the full-time working directors, no allowance is available for part-time directors.
  - (iii) The denial of any allowance in the case of an additional director appointed more than half-way through the financial year so that he cannot fall within the definition of a full-time working director.

Finance Act 1965, section 77 – Shortfall in distributions of close company

- 17. (a) It appears doubtful whether section 77 (6) permits the full recovery of shortfalls in previous years. It is submitted that the above subsection should be amended so that relief for Schedule F purposes is available, for the whole amount of previous shortfalls, in a period in which distributions exceed the required standard, without applying the present restriction. To adjust 'rateably' a previous shortfall appears unsound in principle.
- (b) The accountancy bodies repeat a previous submission that the tapering off relief granted to a company with estate or trading income of under £9,000 should, where the company is associated with another, be granted to each company on a proportionate basis, and not denied to them altogether.
- (c) In addition moribund and dormant companies should be excluded from the definition of 'associated company' for the purpose of section 77 (2).

Finance Act 1965, section 89 (5) — Disallowance of a professional director's remuneration in a close company

18. It is a common practice for practising accountants to act as directors of close companies receiving remuneration which covers certain professional services. Such remuneration may be disallowed as not falling within the exemption granted by section 63 (2) (b) of the Finance Act 1947. This situation can of course be avoided by the resignation of the accountant from the board or by his service at a nominal fee, in either case equivalent remuneration being paid to his firm as professional charges. It is submitted that the law on this point creates an undesirable and artificial distortion of a perfectly proper commercial situation and lends weight to the accountancy bodies' submission in paragraph 12 above that the allowable directors' remuneration should be the amount wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade in the circumstances of the particular company.

Finance Act 1965, Schedule 6, paragraph 4 (1) (b)

19. The accountancy bodies understand that the effect of this paragraph is that interest charges relating to developments, if capitalized, are not allowed in computing the chargeable capital gain on a subsequent realization of the asset. If such interest charges are not allowed for purposes of the corporation tax, the resulting situation appears inequitable as involving an element of double taxation.

Finance Act 1965, Schedule 6, paragraph 25 – Election for valuation on April 6th, 1965

20. The accountancy bodies have previously submitted observations on the provisions of paragraph 25 but wish again to comment as it is apparent that many members of the accountancy profession are concerned about the operation of the election for valuation on April 6th, 1965.

The comments are:

- (i) The time of two years from the date of the disposal within which an election has to be made is insufficient. In most cases consideration of capital gains computations cannot reasonably commence until some time after the end of the fiscal year or accounting period concerned and in the case of a disposal early in the fiscal year or accounting period over one year may have elapsed before a disposal is considered, without any delay having arisen. It is submitted that the period in which notice should be given should be related to the end of the accounting period or fiscal year in which the disposal takes place and should run for three years thereafter.
- (ii) The provisions of sub-paragraph (3) under which an election is irrevocable and the practice whereby market value on April 6th, 1965, in relation to any disposal cannot be determined until an election has been made operate to the detriment of the taxpayer. The negotiation of market value on April 6th, 1965, in circumstances where no guidance is available from actual, as distinct from deemed, disposals at that time depends very largely on matters of opinion and equally erudite opinions may lead to materially different views as to market value. It is submitted that the taxpayer should not suffer any greater chargeable gain from adoption of the market value basis than that arising on the time apportionment basis and paragraph 25 should be amended accordingly.

Finance Act 1965, Schedule 6, paragraph 27 (1) - Reorganization of share capital

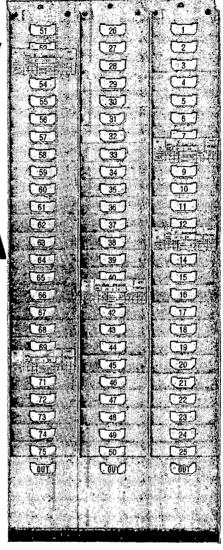

21. The accountancy bodies submit that it is inequitable that in cases where unquoted shares have been concerned in a reorganization prior to April 6th, 1965, the application of the time apportionment basis should be excluded. It is submitted that the deemed disposal and re-acquisition should be treated as occurring on the date of the last reorganization prior to April 6th, 1965, and not on April 6th, 1965.

Finance Act 1965, Schedule 7, paragraphs 4-7

22. These paragraphs offer deferment of a capital gains tax liability in a variety of circumstances, for example where as a result of reconstruction, conversion, or amalgamation, a shareholder receives shares in the same or another company

At any one time, five out of every hundred employees are off work—sick. During winter epidemics this figure is often multiplied.

Absence of workpeople knocks productivity hard. Men away sick are hindered in their recovery by worries over loss of wages and the difficult times their families will endure if they cannot soon get back to work.

Many forward-looking companies ease these worries—and help productivity with a Norwich Union Group Sickness and Accident policy. During disability the policy makes up the State benefit to something like the sick man's regular wage. For prospective employees it is an attractive fringe benefit. For those already on the payroll it promotes company loyalty, and helps sick employees get back to work. In the context of modern pressures on production this insurance makes sound business sense.

in substitution for, or in addition to, his original holding. One circumstance which does not appear to be covered, however, is the liquidation of a holding company where shares in one or more subsidiaries are distributed to the members in specie (that being the only distribution). There is, for all practical purposes, no realization of the underlying investment, and the shareholders are in no better position to meet a capital gains tax liability (unless they sell some of the holding in which case a short-term gain may arise) than they are in the circumstances of paragraphs 4 to 7, which, it is submitted, should be extended to cover this point. Exactly the same point arises in connection with trusts.

Finance Act 1965, Schedule 11

25. (a) Paragraph 9 (1) (a). Meaning of 'Distribution'.

The accountancy bodies again draw attention to the effect of this paragraph which is that interest on loans or advances paid to a director/participator or his associates counts as a distribution and again submit that this provision should be relaxed so that, for example, interest at commercial rates on such loans or advances should be allowed.

(b) Paragraph 3 (2). Premiums paid on redemption of share capital.

There are many companies with redeemable preference shares which were issued at par many years ago wholly for new consideration and are redeemable at any time at the company's option at a premium. Notwithstanding that the terms of issue were reasonably comparable with those of quoted preference shares at that time, the current redemption of such shares would result in the redemption premium being regarded as a distribution under the provisions of this paragraph. The result of this is that the company deducts income tax at the standard rate from the premium which ranks as income for surtax purposes of the individual shareholders. It is again submitted that provisions similar to those of paragraph 7 (2) of Schedule 11 should be introduced to cover such a case.

27. (a) Paragraph (1) (3).

The accountancy bodies have previously submitted that for the purposes of this paragraph recognition should be extended to all regular overseas Stock Exchanges. It is suggested that problems of definition would be overcome if recognition for the purposes of this paragraph were given to all overseas Stock Exchanges which are recognized by the Bank of England for exchange control purposes. If this suggestion is accepted, it would seem appropriate for it to be applied as from the commencement of the close company legislation.

(b) Paragraphs 2 and 5.

The accountancy bodies submit that the definitions of associate and associated company in these paragraphs are much too wide, including as they do companies without any commercial or other connection merely because of possibly fortuitous circumstances of relationship which cause the shareholders to be treated as associates. Having regard to these paragraphs and to the obscure wording of paragraph 3 (4) it would appear, for example, that A Ltd, a United Kingdom company wholly owned by X would be denied abatement for shortfall purposes merely because X's brother Y, who has emigrated to Australia, owns all the shares of B Pty Ltd. It is submitted that not only should the definitions be clarified so as to exclude such an interpretation but holdings in non-resident companies should be excluded.

(c) Paragraph 3 (4).

The accountancy bodies again draw attention to the severe difficulties which may arise in establishing the status of a company as a close company or otherwise, where the shares are widely held. It is again submitted that, to reduce these difficulties no owner of a holding of less than I per cent of the issued shares of any class should rank as an associate, either for determining close company status or for determining the status of a director for the purposes of paragraph 6 of this Schedule.

(d) Paragraph 7 (3).

The accountancy bodies have noted that tax districts differ in their interpretation of the meaning of 'the estate or trading income' in paragraph 7 (3) (a) and the proviso to section 77 (2) as some, it appears, interpret the phrase as meaning the estate or trading income before deduction of corporation tax. The accountancy bodies do not agree with this interpretation and seek confirmation that such tax should be deducted for the above purposes.

(e) Paragraph 9 (1) (a).

The above paragraph requires dividends to be paid during or within twelve months after the accounting period if they are to be taken into account for shortfall purposes. This period is often inadequate in practice and having regard to the possible disadvantage of relying on relief given under section 77 (6), it is submitted that the period in which such dividends may be paid should be extended to a date six months after the date of agreement of the shortfall.

Finance Act 1966, section 28 – Dividends paid out of pre-1966–67 profits

28. In the representations on the Finance Bill 1966, confirmation was sought that excess dividends paid on or before May 3rd, 1966, for the purposes of section 28 (3) which would have been covered by the one-year surplus under the provisions of the Finance Act 1965 will remain covered by section 28 (2) as dividends paid on April 6th, 1966. This point was dealt with in the subsequent discussions after examples had been given, the Board intimated that they would examine it. The accountancy bodies would be pleased to know the result of this examination.

FINANCE ACT 1967

Finance Act 1967, section 20 and Schedule 10 – Group relief

- 33. The accountancy bodies wish to reiterate the views previously expressed that, subject to proper safeguards, a group of companies should be entitled at its option to be treated as a single unit for all taxation purposes. It is appreciated that the group relief procedure introduced by section 20 and Schedule 10 of the Finance Act 1967, and the recently announced concession relating to the treatment of dividends for purposes of shortfall go some way in this direction, but the accountancy bodies remain convinced that the adoption of their views would achieve a major simplification of the tax code without detriment to the public revenue. Subject to this major submission the accountancy bodies wish to submit the following points. Their number and complexity illustrate the need for the simplification submitted above.
  - (i) In relation to subsection 7 (c) it is submitted that group relief should be available between United Kingdom resident companies if it would be available but for the non-resident status of some third company.
  - (ii) The representatives of the accountancy bodies under- stood that the question of the exclusion from group relief of groups whose parent company is a finance house would be re-examined. They would be interested to learn the result of this examination.

- (iii) Submissions were previously made that group relief should be available against all classes of income including franked investment income and that the set off of capital profits and losses within a group should be allowed. It is understood that the implementation of these submissions is thought to entail complicated anti-avoidance provisions but the accountancy bodies nevertheless express the hope that these practical difficulties can be overcome.
- (iv) The submission is repeated that trading losses and capital allowances under section 56 (6) of the Finance Act 1965 incurred by a grouped company in a year where there is a net group loss should be capable of being offset against profits of other companies in the group for a previous period on the basis of the relief granted by section 58 (2) of the Finance Act 1965.
- (v) The submission was made that paragraphs II and I2 of Schedule 10 which relate to the three-year surplus and overspill respectively should be amended so as to provide that no company is in a worse position than it would have been under the subvention payments system. It is understood that this submission so far as it relates to overspill was to be re-examined and information as to the result would be appreciated.

The accountancy bodies also submit the following points:

- (a) It appears anomalous that a loss sustained by a trading company is not available for group relief against the profits of the members of the consortium which owns it, indirectly, through an intermediate trading company which does not fall within the definition of a holding company in subsection 20 (6) (b).
- (b) If a company within a group has management expenses set against overseas income attracting double tax relief, effective relief for corporation tax in respect of the expenses is lost. It should be possible for the whole of such management expenses to be relieved against group profits.
- (c) The accountancy bodies note that the legislation (section 28 and Part I of the Seventh Schedule of the Finance Act 1966) governing the three-year surplus of members of groups of companies, which denies to a member of a group that part of its three-year surplus which is attributable to dividends paid to fellow members whilst correspondingly increasing (subject to certain restrictions) the three-year surplus of the member receiving such dividends, does not allow this increase to be made as regards dividends passing from subsidiaries to the principal member of the group via intermediate group members. It is submitted that an appropriate increase should be given in such cases.
- (d) If a replacement of a business asset which would otherwise qualify for relief under section 33 of the Finance Act 1965 is made by a different member of a group, no relief is available. There may be sound commercial reasons for a replacement to be effected in this manner and the accountancy bodies submit that section 33 (or paragraph 6 of the Thirteenth Schedule) of the Finance Act 1965 to be extended accordingly.
- (e) The concession announced in the Revenue's Press Release of November 6th, 1967, requires an existing group to adopt the basis with effect from the first accounting period ending after April 5th, 1966. It is submitted that such retrospective adoption should be optional on the part of the group and that it should be competent for a group to adopt the concessional basis commencing with accounting periods ending after the date of the announcement.

Finance Act 1967, Schedule 13, paragraph (1)

39. (a) Losses of husband and wife.

It has been previously submitted that, any allowable loss accrued at death in respect of any chargeable assets passing to a surviving spouse which cannot be relieved should be carried forward for the benefit of the survivor. It was also submitted that any such loss should be available for carryforward to the personal representatives. The Board indicated that they would consider these points and the accountancy bodies would be pleased to know the result of their consideration. The accountancy bodies also repeat the submission that spouses living together should be treated as one person for the purpose of the provisions of paragraph 17 (3) of Schedule 7, Finance Act 1965. Thus if both spouses transfer assets to a person connected with them, the loss accruing to the one spouse should be available for set-off against the gain accruing to the other. This suggestion is consistent with the general taxation principle of joint status of spouses living together.

(b) Paragraph 5 - Shares in close company transferring assets at an undervalue.

The Board were unable to give an assurance to the representatives of the accountancy bodies that the provisions of paragraph 18 of Schedule 7, Finance Act 1965, do not apply where the amount equal to the difference between the market value of the asset transferred and the consideration has been treated as a distribution for the purposes of Schedule F. It was understood that the point would be re-examined and information as to the outcome would be appreciated.

OTHER SUBMISSIONS

Finance Act 1953, section 19 – Changes in ownership of trade etc.

41. It has been previously submitted that the time limit of twelve months in subsection (3) is inadequate to allow the taxpayers concerned to make a decision and give notice with full knowledge of its effects. This submission assumes greater importance now that, in certain cases, partnerships of more than twenty persons are permitted under the Companies Act 1967. The shortness of the twelve months allowed under section 19 is in striking contrast to the six or seven years specified by section 129 of the Income Tax Act 1952, which provides a parallel relief. The accountancy bodies submit that the period should be extended to a more reasonable length or that the General or Special Commissioners should be empowered to extend the period on reasonable grounds being shown.

Income Tax Act 1952, Ninth Schedule

44. The accountancy bodies wish to draw attention again to the fact that despite the announcement of the Financial Secretary to the Treasury on July 2nd, 1957, no action has yet been taken to implement the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Taxation and Profits and Income that the restrictive wording of paragraph 7 of this Schedule should be amended so as to permit the allowance of expenditure 'reasonably incurred for the appropriate performance' of the duties of the office or employment (paragraph 140). The accountancy bodies submit that this long overdue amendment should now be made.

Finance and Commerce

Lawes Chemical

THERE is an echo of last week's reprint of the accounts of Associated Fisheries Ltd in the reproduction this week of the accounts of Lawes Chemical Company Ltd. The Associated Fisheries' accounts recorded the settlement of claims made against the company by its former chief executive, Mr Avison Wormald. It was to Lawes Chemical that Mr Wormald went after leaving Associated Fisheries and he had to take charge of the reorganization of a company which had fallen on hard times.

Mr Wormald became a director of Lawes nineteen months ago and the size of the problem facing him can be seen in the seven-year financial summary included in the reprint of the accounts. For the fifteen months to September 30th, 1966, there was a loss of £445,227. Incidentally, when one always reads from left to right, it is disconcerting to find the seven-year financial summary reading the other way round. Placing the latest figures to the right is the procedure followed in the vast majority of cases.

It will be seen that the year under review, to September 30th, 1967, produced an even bigger loss of £493,169, and there is an adverse profit and loss account balance of £604,125 in the parent company's accounts, and £533,412 in the group.

Exceptional factors

The chairman, Mr J. W. E. Banks, points out that the past year's loss, like that of the previous period, 'is only partially due to actual trading operations' and, unless the board thought there were exceptional factors involved, 'the future of the company would be in serious doubt'. The exceptional factors are 'of great importance'.

In the first instance, production from the plant was insufficient to fulfil about 25 per cent of orders received and that fact arose from a series of policy decisions. It had become increasingly clear that, with the higher concentration of compounds in fertilizers needed by customers, the plant was unable to produce a high quality product.

Important alterations to the plant and the installation of new equipment were authorized. The installation process led to a loss of production time and there were serious teething troubles. The result was that, although a much improved quality of product was obtained, there was a substantial reduction in throughput. Some supplies were bought out but not sufficient to make good the shortfall.

The present position is that a high standard of quality is being successfully maintained but throughput is still not high enough. With the co-operation of the unions and a strengthened technical staff, production is showing a steady improvement and it is hoped that in the course of the year the position will become completely satisfactory.

Revaluation

The board is budgeting for a major improvement in trading in the current year during which earnings will not have to carry the same heavy cost of reorganization as did the past year's. The accounts of the company for the past year reflect major changes in the value of fixed assets. Last December shareholders were told that a warehouse property had been sold, achieving a surplus on book value of £399,275 and an improvement in current revenue of nearly £20,000 a year due to reduction in interest charges. This improvement is not shown in the accounts made up to the previous September 30th.

On the revaluation of land and buildings and the substantial writing down of the value of plant, the chairman says that the value of the former is based on 'expert' advice in so far as the land and some of the buildings are concerned. The value of the factory buildings is shown at a figure based on the directors' estimate of their use as production assets. A complete review was made as part of the reorganization of production and this disclosed that some sections of the plant needed renewal and others had only a limited life. The superphosphate plant has been closed down and requirements are being bought from outside.

In the light of the results of the review of plant and bearing in mind changes in manufacturing methods, new values were attributed to the various sections of plant and balance sheet values adjusted accordingly. There will be a consequential reduction in depreciation of some £60,000 a year.

Change in structure

The valuation now placed on the company's assets both fixed and current is viewed as being 'entirely realistic and reflecting the major changes which have taken place both in property values on the one hand and the productive value of assets on the other'.

The fertilizer industry, the chairman comments, is going through a change in structure which could be favourable to the company. It is only a few years since fertilizer manufacturers were obliged to produce themselves the most important basic chemicals – ammonia and phosphoric acid. But increasing scale of manufacture abroad and new technologies of transport make it doubtful whether manufacture in the United Kingdom will be justified in the coming years and companies such as Lawes, with no investment in primary materials, may well have an advantage. The ability to buy in the cheapest market will be of great importance. Lawes' purchasing arrangements have been reorganized 'with benefits which are already substantial'.

A final point to be made in connection with this week's reprint is that it includes the auditors' report which, it will be seen, is presented in the newly advocated form with economy of words. The report and accounts themselves, however, do not show any move to anticipate the 1967 Act, but the Lawes board has obviously had other things to think about.

NOTES TO THE ACCOUNTS

1. DIRECTORS' VALUATION OF FIXED ASSETS

The freehold fand, buildings, plant and motor vehicles were revalued by the directors at 30th September, 1967. In arriving at the value of land and office and warehouse buildings, the directors were guided by a professional valuation carried out in November 1966. In the case of factory buildings, plant and motor vehicles the values represent the directors' estimates of the worth of these assets on a going concern basis.

The bases of depreciating fixed assets have been revised with effect from 1st October, 1967. If the revised bases and the revaluations mentioned above had been adopted for the year ended 30th September, 1967 the charge for depreciation would have been about £42,000 compared with an actual charge of £104,527.

Auditors' report to the members of Lawes Chemical Company Limited

IN our opinion the accounts and notes set out on pages fabovel give, so far as concerns members of the holding company, a true and fair view of the state of affairs at 30th September, 1967 and of the loss for the year ended on that date of the company and of the group and comply with the Companies Act, 1948.

CITY NOTES

UST as the run up to the Washington gold price compromise was dominated by the action of the French in going all out to destroy the London gold pool system, so the follow-up to the introduction of a two-tier gold system and reinforcement of the two major reserve currencies is likely to be dominated by French action.

It remains to be seen whether the French, having secured a higher gold price, will be prepared to co-operate in the wider field of international currency stabilization. That must depend very much upon whether the French consider they have won a battle or a war.

If it is the former, and there is still a determination to attack the dollar, then the French process of winning the war will bring down something more than the dollar. If it is the latter, then there is a basis for wider international currency co-operation through the International Monetary Fund and the Central Banks, provided that both the United States and the United Kingdom continue to take action to correct their adverse balance of payments positions.

There is no doubt that last Tuesday's Budget will, temporarily at least, go some way towards meeting the United Kingdom position, but American action in the payments sphere is likely to prove of greater importance and economic force.

A domestic side-effect of the moves to stabilize the dollar and sterling is likely to be an increase in building society interest rates. Clearly there is no reliable basis on which an early reduction in Bank rate can be predicted, and if demand for houses is maintained at its present level and needs to be financially served, then the building societies seem to have little option but to increase their interest rates in order to attract the necessary funds.

What could delay the move is the strong liquid positions that most building societies are currently carrying. But with the net intake of funds already falling, there is a limit to which the building society industry's liquidity can be run down. A preliminary to a general rise in interest rates may be a trend towards higher rates by individual smaller societies.

What's Wrong with P.A.Y.E.?

SIR, - Perhaps I may clarify a small factual point in Mr Phillips' article 'What's Wrong with P.A.Y.E.' in your issue of March 9th; and at the same time express the Department's regret on hearing the news of his death.

Mr Phillips says (page 304) that 'for some mysterious reason' the free pay for code 200 is £5 10s for the first thirteen weeks of the tax year, drops to £4 16s at week fourteen, and is £,5 9s thereafter.

I am afraid that Mr Phillips, when he wrote this, must have been looking not at the current tax tables but at those in force in the opening weeks of 1965-66; and the 'mysterious reason' is no more than the changes in personal reliefs made in the 1965 Budget. The tables used in the first nine weeks of the 1965-66 tax year, having been printed and issued before the Budget, did not take account of these changes; and they were brought into effect by the issue of amended pages for Table A (it was only Table A which required alteration) running from the tenth week of the year, after which deductions continued on the new basis.

Amended pages for Table A in the first nine weeks of the year were subsequently issued for use in 1966-67 and 1967-68, when (so far as P.A.Y.E. was concerned) tax rates remained unchanged from those brought into force in 1965-66. Under the current tables, as (subject to Budget changes) is always the case, each P.A.Y.E. code number is allotted a constant amount of free pay in each week of the tax year. Thus code 200, the one mentioned by Mr Phillips, gives £5 9s free pay in week one and in every other week.

Yours faithfully,

ALAN F. ROYLE, Press Officer, INLAND REVENUE.

Equipment Notes and News

New Univac 9400 Computer

THE third model in the 9000 series of Univac computers has recently been announced. This is designed to provide multi-programming and real-time working and is compatible with other models in the series.

Whilst the main store is normally 24K, this can be increased to over 131,000 bytes with an effective cycle time of 300 nanoseconds per byte. A minimum of four tape drives can if required be expanded to sixteen, and an option to read/read, read/write and write/write simultaneously can be made available, with read or write speeds ranging from 34,160 to 192,000 bytes per second.

The 9400 can be employed as a combined tape and disc unit by adding from two to eight direct access storage disc drives. Each disc pack has a capacity of over 7 million bytes.

The multi-programming capabilities allow for processing of up to five concurrent programs such as communications, sequential batch processing, random processing, disc or tape sorting and complex mathematical calculations.

A choice of various peripheral units is available but a basic Univac 9400 system including a 24K memory, 4 Uniservo VI C magnetic tape units, an 1,100 lines per minute printer, a card reader and punch would cost about £100,000. Rental terms are available, and it is expected to begin deliveries during the second quarter of 1969.

Computer Print-out Service

A FAST duplicating service of continuous computer print-out was recently opened at the Rank Xerox Copy Centre, 31-32 Alfred Place, London WC1.

This bureau service, believed to be the first of its kind available outside the U.S.A. uses the new 2400 IV machine which is designed to print from any continuous stationery of up to 15½×11 in., page size. The machine reduces this large size to A4 or will duplicate direct from smaller than this on to ordinary paper at the rate of 2,400 copies per hour. It is also capable, for example, of collating a report of up to 150 pages into sets of 30 in under two hours. Depending on the quantity of pages the price, including collation, is between 2.2d and 2.5d per duplicated page.

Rank Xerox Ltd, Rank Xerox House, 338 Euston Road, London NW1.

Company Document Copier

As readers may well know, under the 1967 Companies Act every limited company, public or private, must file a copy of its balance sheet and profit and loss account, and also copies of auditors' and directors' reports with the Registrar of Companies.

One way to get these with the minimum of difficulty is to use a Kodak Verifax 'Witness' copier which produces permanent copies up to 14×18 in., such copies will be accepted by the Companies Registration Office provided they are perfectly legible. The price of the copier is £160 15s and copies will cost about 8d each if six copies each time are wanted.

The 'matrix' - size 14 × 18 in. - from which the copies are taken after this has been exposed to light with the original, costs approximately 2s 6d, and each copy from it  $2\frac{1}{2}d$ . If only one copy is taken it costs 2s  $8\frac{1}{2}d$ , but reduces for each extra copy required (i.e. two copies cost 2s 11d or 1s 5\frac{1}{2}d each and so on).

Visible Export Documentation

A 'VISTA-RAK' installation of fourteen model A8 and A18 units with a total of 364 pockets holds export orders in progress at William Sanderson & Sons Ltd, distillers of VAT 69. Inserted files are identified by a numbered tab, with the orders subdivided into the market area by destina-

This system permits a quick visual check of the state of progress of any order and eliminates the necessity of ploughing through files to find the required order.

Vista-rak model A8 with eight pockets costs £3 5s and the A18 (eighteen pockets) costs f.6 7s 6d. There are up to twenty other pocket combinations and sizes available in 'black and tan' or 'duo-tone grey' finishes.

O. & M. Supplies, 169 Queen's Gate, London SW7.

Save the Children Fund Computer

WITH a view to streamlining its existing accounting procedures, the Save the Children Fund is to use the London bureau of English Electric Computers.

Data will be prepared initially at the Queen Anne's Gate headquarters of the S.C.F. and will be passed to the bureau as sheets of information ready-coded with a check digit, source number and payment denomination. This will be fed into the computer at the end of each quarter with details of some 2,750 cash receipts and between two hundred and two hundred and fifty amendments or additions to the main file details of approximately seven thousand children. The file will be updated and schedules printed out showing how much should be paid to individual supported children.

The new system will also supply S.C.F.'s administrators with a breakdown detailing how much cash was raised in the United Kingdom, how much came from sister organizations in the Commonwealth and how much came from individuals and other bodies.

English Electric Computers Ltd, Computer House, Euston Centre, London NW1.

Computers for Coin-in-the-Slot TV

THREE NCR 500 magnetic card computers and an NCR 315 magnetic ledger card system have been installed at a cost of over £200,000 by the Save and View Club Ltd, in their Brentwood, Essex, headquarters.

The computers have been installed over a period of eight months for the purpose of taking over 175,000 customers' accounts from a semi-mechanized system which had difficulty in coping with returns from 180 branch offices each day. The collectors' slips showing the amounts collected from the customers' meters are handed in and checked against the cash returns. The details are then sent to the head office accounts department where data is posted on Class 32 input preparation machines which, as well as up-dating the customers' visible record and storing the information on magnetic strips at the back of the card, also punches the essential account data on to paper tape. This tape is then fed into the processor to compute the customers' account.

The rental accounting system is complex as 'cash in the slot' from each customer is posted to the account in categories of priority. Under the old system, a manual calculation had to be made as to whether sufficient cash had been taken out of the customer's meter to cover his various commitments (rental or hire-purchase arrears, aerial or goods arrears) in the accounting period – usually six weeks. Now the computer carries out all the calculations automatically once the 'cash-in-the-meter' amount has been entered.

In addition the NCR 315 system will be used to create an integrated stock control system, controlling hundreds of thousands of radio and television components and parts held in stock in Save and View depots and in a fleet of several hundred service vehicles throughout the country. It will also control the sales and distribution of a large merchandise stock of electrical goods available to Club customers.

National Cash Register Co Ltd, 206/216 Marylebone Road, London NW1.

Equipment for New Cunarder

Two Multilith 1850 offset duplicating machines, an A-M photo-direct camera, a Model MTD-30 with attachments, two Varityper 720 cold-type composing machines, a Headliner 820 photo-composing machine and an A-M power-operated guillotine are among the equipment being installed in the new Cunarder QE 2.

Work from 3×5 in. to 18×15 in. in size can be handled, in either black and white, half-tone or colour. Output of the small offset machines can vary between 4,000 to 8,000 impressions per hour. All this will facilitate internal communication of a very high order, ranging from the production of day-to-day forms and stationery of all kinds to a daily newspaper.

A view of the three NCR 500 magnetic card computers installed by the Save and View Club Ltd to handle over 175,000 customer accounts.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland

Report of the Council

Extracts from the Report of the Council to be presented to the annual general meeting of the members of the Institute on March 29th.

Accounts and balance sheet

HEN the accounts for 1966 and balance sheet as at V December 31st, 1966, were submitted to the annual general meeting on March 31st, 1967, it was stated by the Convener of the Finance and General Purposes Committee that the Institute's budget indicated the possibility of a break-even for 1967. As a result of action taken by the Council, the Finance and General Purposes Committee and the Committees responsible for the main heads of expenditure in the Institute's accounts, efforts were made as a matter of deliberate policy to seek to improve the position. It is, therefore, pleasing to the Council to be able to record that the income and expenditure account for 1967 in fact shows a surplus of £7,149, notwithstanding the heavy expenditure in travelling involved by the discussions with regard to the future of the accountancy profession which are mentioned elsewhere in this report. It is expected that expenditure will continue to rise in 1968 and 1969 and further action may be necessary in the near future to ensure that there is no depletion of the Institute's funds.

Special Committee on Education and Training of Apprentices

Other headings in this report refer to progress made towards implementing in 1968-69 the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee on Education and Training of Apprentices under the Convenorship of Mr G. D. H. Dewar which was published in February 1967 after adoption by the Council.

Meetings of members were held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness and London in February and March 1967 and the views there expressed have been of help to the Council.

Plans for the Junior Certificate in Accounting recommended in the Dewar Committee's report have had to be postponed because of the integration plans referred to elsewhere in this report.

The future of the accountancy profession

A letter in the following terms was sent from the President to the members of the Institute on October 18th, 1967:

'A statement on the above subject in the Annual Report of the Council presented to the Annual General Meeting of members of the Institute held on March 31st, 1967, concluded with an expression of the Council's hope to be able to make a further announcement in the summer.

As the statement pointed out, the reference to the Monopolies Commission of practices in the professions necessitated a re-examination of the scheme. This re-examination has now been completed and much progress has been made towards adjusting the details of the integration proposals. Accordingly it is hoped that, by the end of this year, definitive proposals will have been laid before the Councils of the six participating bodies in order to seek their authority for them to be issued to their respective memberships by the spring of 1968.

'In addition to proposals for the integration as chartered accountants of the members of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants with the members of the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants in Great Britain and Ireland, a number of other important proposals have been formulated. An outline of the matters under examination by the Joint Steering Committee of representatives of the six participating bodies was given in the statement in the Annual Report referred to above. These matters can now be re-stated as follows:

- '(a) the early introduction by the English Institute of higher educational standards for entry into training: these will be comparable with the higher standard of preliminary qualification which will apply to Scottish Institute apprentices from March 1st, 1968, onwards;
- '(b) the early introduction by the English Institute of a period of full-time study of accountancy and related subjects before entry into, or at an early stage of, practical training: the Scottish Institute's requirements regarding an academic year's attendance at a Scottish University during the second year of training will continue in force;
- '(c) the introduction by the English Institute of a broader and more advanced examination syllabus to cover in greater detail than hitherto industrial and public service accountancy subjects as well as modern systems and techniques: the Scottish Institute's examination syllabus will be similarly broadened;
- '(d) arrangements whereby students can be trained in practising offices, or in industry, or in the public service as they might select;
- '(e) arrangements whereby students in training for the "chartered" qualification will be given greater opportunities to participate in Institute affairs;
- '(f) the creation of a second tier of qualified accountants, to fill the void which would otherwise be created by the raising of educational entry standards, with a ladder from this lower tier to that of chartered accountant for those who have the determination and ability to climb it;
- '(g) arrangements for dual or triple membership, whereby a member of one or other of the enlarged Institutes of Chartered Accountants will be eligible to join, if he so wishes, either or both of the other two on paying the appropriate additional annual subscription; and

'(h) arrangements for closer collaboration between the three enlarged Institutes.

'The adoption of the proposals by the Scottsh Institute will involve increasing the size of the Council and the inclusion among its membership of members of the A.C.C.A., the I.C.W.A. and the I.M.T.A.

'On the assumption that a scheme will be issued to members by the spring of 1968, arrangements will be made for area meetings of members to be held during the late spring and early summer. Representatives of the Council will be available to attend these meetings to hear members' views and answer questions about the proposals.

'Special General Meetings will then be convened by each of the participating bodies to give members the opportunity of voting upon the general principles of the proposals. It is hoped that these meetings will take place in the autumn of 1968 so that the Councils concerned may have authority to prepare the necessary changes in the Royal Charters and Rules.

'If such authority is given, approval by members at further Special General Meetings will be required precedent to seeking allowance from Her Majesty in Council in respect of the Royal Charters and from the Privy Council in respect of the Rules.'

International Congress of Accountants

The Ninth International Congress of Accountants was held in Paris from September 6th to 12th under the Presidency of M F-M. Richard, with M J. Wisner as Rapporteur-Général.

The theme of the Congress was 'The new horizons of accounting'.

Professor D. S. Anderson, as President of the Scottish Institute, took the chair at a plenary session on "The contribution of accounting techniques to the resolution of economic problems at government level". At the closing plenary session it fell to him to express appreciation on behalf of all the congress participants of the work of the President and Executive Committee of the Congress.

Mr W. S. Risk acted as one of the international rapporteurs. His subject was 'Budgetary accounting and its prospects' and his paper was reproduced in *The Account*ants' Magazine for September 1967; in this capacity he had been jointly appointed by the Scottish Institute and The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

Among the national rapporteurs who presented papers were the following members of the Scottish Institute:

A. G. Barclay - 'Present limits and prospects of the technical means available to accountants: an e-camination of three causes of limitations in present computer applications.'

Professor David Flint, T.D., M.A., B.L. - 'The accounting function tomorrow: developing responsibilities and their demands on training.'

T. W. McRae, B.Sc.(ECON.) - 'The use of methematical methods in accounting and auditing: on the relevance of mathematics to the accountant.'

On the nomination of the Council of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants another member of the Scottish Institute, Mr Ames L. Imrie, C.B.E., presented a national paper on 'The contribution of professional accountants to the solution of economic problems at government level'.

Some fifty members of the Scottish Institute attended the Congress, many of them accompanied by their ladies.

Company law

Representatives of the Institute, of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants continued to study the amendments made to the Companies Bill as it progressed through Parliament. A letter on behalf of all three of these accountancy bodies, which dealt with exemption from disclosure for smaller companies, was submitted to the Board of Trade on June 28th, 1967.

The various subcommittees of the Institute's Company Law Committee are at present engaged in preparing material which will form the basis of a memorandum to the Board of Trade on matters which might appear in the next Companies Bill.

Monopolies Commission

On January 30th, 1967, the Board of Trade, under section 5 of the Monopolies and Mergers Act 1965 required the Monopolies Commission to submit to the Board a report on the general effect on the public interest of certain practices so far as they prevail in relation to the supply of professional services, being practices restrictive of certain matters.

In May 1967 the Monopolies Commission invited a large number of institutes, societies, associations and similar bodies appearing to be representative of various occupational groups to submit statements about a long list of matters within the Commission's remit.

A statement on behalf of the Institute was submitted accordingly in October 1967.

Before this statement was adjusted useful discussions took place with representatives of the other five accountancy bodies participating in the discussions about the future of the accountancy profession (referred to elsewhere in this report).

Post-qualifying education

The Post-Qualifying Education Committee continued to expand its activities during the year by providing a greater variety of courses than in previous years. The continued development of post-qualifying education was deemed to require a full-time Director and, as a result, Mr J. G. G. Campbell, B.Sc., C.ENG., M.I.E.E., was appointed and took up office on August 1st, 1967.

Analytical techniques

A series of one-day courses was held in Edinburgh and Glasgow on the subjects of critical path analysis, statistical sampling and discounted cash flow. The first and last of these were split into two separate days, the first dealing with the subject at an elementary level, while the second considered it in greater depth and also demonstrated practical applications of the techniques.

There were 281 enrolments for these courses.

Computers

In 1967 the non-residential Introductory Computer Course was held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and London with a total attendance of 215. In the past three years this course has been attended by 442 members of the Institute.

A residential course on Auditing a Computer was held at St Andrews in April and was attended by 66 participants. This represents a small decrease from 1966.

The Computer Courses Subcommittee was responsible for two further courses related to computers. Both of these were held at Peebles Hotel Hydro. The first, in October, 'Computers for the smaller business' was attended by twenty-three participants, while the second, in November, 'An introduction to systems analysis' was attended by only twenty. Such small attendances make budgeting difficult, but it is felt that new ground has been broken in these subjects.

Management

A new residential course entitled 'A case study in management' was held at St Andrews in September and although only attended by thirty-two participants was considered to have been one of the most successful courses organized by the Post-Qualifying Education Committee.

The residential course on 'An appreciation of management techniques' was repeated at St Andrews at the end of September and was attended by sixty-four participants. This was the second course under this title following the highly successful course in 1966.

Professional subjects: Taxation

Part-time evening courses on capital gains tax and corporation tax were held in Edinburgh and Glasgow and were attended by 175 participants. The basic material for these courses had been prepared for the new residential course on taxation held at the Strathspey Hotel, Aviemore, in November, which was attended by forty-three participants, many of whom had come from the most northerly parts of Scotland. This course was considered by the participants to have been very successful and most welcome in respect of venue.

Auditing

A new residential course on 'Changes in auditing emphasis' was held in Edinburgh in November and was attended by fifty-nine participants, who expressed warm appreciation of the lectures and discussion sessions which made up the course.

The total number of enrolments for Institute postqualifying courses during 1967 was 978.

Research

Institute research

At the beginning of 1967 there were nine research projects on hand and a further three were added in the course of the year. Four projects were brought to a successful conclusion, but one had to be abandoned owing to the inconclusiveness of its results.

A committee paper entitled 'Non-statutory reports on accounts' was published in The Accountant's Magazine for September 1967 and The Accountant for September 23rd, 1967, and individual members' papers dealing with 'Changing value of money and the capital gains tax' appeared in the October and November issues of the magazine. The results of the other two projects concluded were published as separate booklets, one entitled 'Sources of financial and other statistics' in September 1967 and the second entitled 'Valuation of stock and work-in-progress' in January 1968. Work is continuing on the remaining seven projects.

The Council would like to record its appreciation of the assistance given to the Research and Publications Committee by Mr J. G. Lennox, Mr A. H. Macdiarmid, Mr J. T. H. Macnair and Mr G. W. Penrose in respect of the papers which have been published.

Joint activities with other bodies

As in previous years, the committee has maintained close contact with its equivalents in Canada, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United States, and has had the benefit of their views on its own work in addition to commenting on exposure drafts submitted to it by other accountancy bodies. Further, translation work in connection with revising the UEC Lexicon has continued through a subcommittee of the Research and Publications Committee and the Institute's representative on the Commission de Lexicologie Comptable de l'UEC.

A project with which the Institute was co-operating with other interested bodies, carried out at the University of Strathclyde, was one on Uniform Hotel Accounting, the report on which was presented to the University in April 2067.

The Research and Publications Committee is representing the Institute in discussions with other accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom on the effects on the accountancy profession of introducing decimal currency in 1971. In addition the Committee has assisted the Institute's representative on the International Study Group by commenting on various drafts which he has submitted to it.

National Computing Centre

At a meeting held in Glasgow on June 14th, 1967, which was attended by users of and others interested in computers in Scotland, a decision was taken to set up an interim Scottish Committee of the National Computing Centre. The members of the study team which produced the report on the feasibility study into the Computer Education and Applied Research Centre were chosen to act as the interim committee, with powers to co-opt representatives from other interested parties. This committee, on which the Institute is represented by Mr J. C. Shaw, has been active in promoting meetings of computer users in Scotland and bringing into being a Scottish Association of N.C.C. members.

The Council is also pleased to be able to report that its nominee, Mr G. B. Esslemont, was elected to the Council of the N.C.C. at the general meeting on July 19th, 1967.

Preliminary qualification for apprenticeship

The year has seen the raising of the minimum standard required for preliminary qualification to that of an Attestation of Academic Fitness for entry to a Scottish University issued by the Scottish Universities Entrance Board. This new standard has applied to students whose indentures of apprenticeship were lodged after February 29th, 1968, for registration, notice of the impending change having first been given in 1962.

New 1969 examination syllabus

During the year under review the Examining Board shouldered an additional burden: while fulfilling its normal function of examining candidates on the present syllabus, it has devoted much time to considering the detailed arrangements needed for the introduction in 1969 of the new examination syllabus referred to earlier in this report.

IN PARLIAMENT

Companies: Winding-up

Mr Grant asked the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of company winding-up orders made by the Courts in 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967, respectively; and if he will express these as a percentage of the number of companies on the Register for the years in question.

Mr Darling: As the answer contains several figures, I am circulating it in the Official Report.

The information is as follows:

Year	Or	ders made	As a percentage of the total Number of
	Gr		Companies or the Registers
	0,	3	per cent
1963		742	o·156
1964		738	0.144
1965		834	0.122
1966		969	0.174
1067		1,280	0.225

Computer Equipment: Investment Grants

Mr Costain asked the President of the Board of Trade why investment grants are being refused on computer equipment unless the claimant owns or leases a central processing unit.

Mr Darling: Grants for computers are available to a wider range of business users than other investment grants. We decided, however, to make grants only to firms which provide a complete computer installation, including both a central processing unit and peripheral equipment.

MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION GROUP

There will be a meeting to reconstitute the Management Discussion Group of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants for 1968-69 at the offices of Robson, Morrow & Co, St Alphage House, 17th Floor, 2 Fore Street, London EC2, on Tuesday, April 2nd, at 6.30 p.m. Beer and sandwiches will be provided and all those interested in attending are welcome.

WOLVERHAMPTON SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The next meeting of the Wolver-hampton Society of Chartered Accountants will be held on April 8th at 5.45 for 6 p.m. at the Victoria Hotel, Wolverhampton. The meeting will take the form of an open forum for general discussion on points of professional matters arising during the year and of current interest.

At the same time and venue, the Society's annual general meeting will take place on April 22nd.

SOUTH ESSEX SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

'Advanced computer applications' was the theme of a whole-day course held by the South Essex Society of Chartered Accountants on March 8th at the Ford Motor Co Ltd, Warley, Brentwood, Essex. Some sixty members attended including practitioners from both large and small firms as well as those in industry.

The speakers, all from Ford of Europe, included Mr K. Ashcroft. F.C.A., A.C.W.A., manager, profit analysis department, who discussed the use of computers for the preparation of budgets and long-term profit forecasts and which analysis functions were economical for computerization; Mr R. H. L. Coleman, manager, equipment and software planning, who spoke about the equipment installed and planned both in the computer centre at Warley and throughout the rest of Europe, including reference to the continental data transmission networks, and Mr D. W. Free, B.SC. (ENG.), manager, systems planning department, who dealt with the program for the computerization of data flow necessary in the pre-introduction phase of a new car model.

During the course, members visited the company's computer installation where they saw programs being tested before being put into operation and the various facets of computer work were discussed by the members and speakers during an hour-long discussion period.

SOUTH-WEST ESSEX GROUP OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Mr N. E. A. Moore, Secretary of the Decimal Currency Board, spoke at a meeting on March 6th of the Southwest Essex Group of Chartered Accountants to some ninety members and local bankers on the subject of decimalization of the currency. After dealing with what has been decided by the 1967 Decimal Currency Act, Mr Moore described the new coinage and, among other things, the timing of its introduction and the functions of the Decimal Currency Board. He emphasized that early attention to the change-over problems was essential.

The next meeting of the Group will take place on Monday, April 1st, when Mr Kenneth R. Cork, F.C.A., will be speaking on 'The practical approach to liquidation' and will explain how a practitioner deals with liquidations. The meeting will be held at St Aubyns, 34 Eastern Road, Romford, Essex, at 6.15 p.m. for 6.45 p.m. and refreshments will be available.

THE ACCOUNTANTS' CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

'The Christian attitude to earthly treasure' will be the subject of a discussion meeting of the Accountants' Christian Fellowship to be held on Friday next, March 29th, at the Waverley Hotel, Southampton Row, London WCI, at 6.30 for 6.45 p.m. Mr J. J. Stordy, of Delta Metal Co Ltd, will open the discussion. Before the meeting, there will be a buffet supper (charge 12s 6d, students 5s).

At 6.15 p.m., at the same address, the annual general meeting of the Fellowship will be held.

PAYING TAX FOR THE FIRST TIME

Revenue booklet

The Board of Inland Revenue have published a booklet entitled Paying Tax for the First Time for the new tax-payer. It sets out the P.A.Y.E. system in simple terms with particular attention paid to the school-leaver starting work for the first time. Topics covered include the method of claiming personal allowances, and the procedure which is followed when changing work and at the end of the income tax year.

Copies of the booklet are available from the offices of H.M. Inspectors of Taxes, free of charge.

LEEDS, BRADFORD AND HUDDERSFIELD STUDENTS

Residential Course

From April 26th to 27th, the residential course joint committee of the Leeds, Bradford and District Society of Chartered Accountants and the Leeds, Bradford and Huddersfield Students' Societies are holding their seventeenth residential course, which this year is to be at St John's College, York.

Intended for students taking their Final in two parts as well as for those sitting for the full Final, the course is designed primarily to assist students by providing lectures within the Institute's syllabus, particularly on those subjects which cause most difficulty and also to give students opportunities to discuss examination problems not only with lecturers, but also among themselves. The course will deal with a wide selection of subjects including share valuations, taxation and executorship accounts, group accounts, management accounting, and budgetary control.

Millie loves the summer but she can't see her roses now

Millie is one of the increasing number of elderly blind. For them blindness can be particularly lonely. Most of them are gratly helped by the RNIB, with homes and holidays, braille literature, and Talking Books for their leisure hours. RNIB help nearly all the 113,000 blind of Britain.

To do this job properly, we need an everincreasing income. Donations and coverants and particularly legacies mean so much. We shall be very grateful if you will commend this work to your clients when drawing up their wills. We hope you will make this your contribution to our Centenary Year.

COMPUTER COURSES FOR ACCOUNTANTS

Can accountants in your company use computerised accounting techniques with confidence? If not this advertisement is important to you.

An increasing number of computerised methods are adopted daily in commerce and industry. It is essential for professional men to be properly trained in these new methods. Our beginners courses cover the essential aspects of data processing, e.g.: what a computer is, how accountants use computers, analysis of accounting systems, etc. On the course you will gradually become familiar with essential computer jargon. All lectures are given by professional men, with many years of practical experience in the computer industry.

You do not require a special knowledge of mathematics or computers to follow the course. On the course you will be given a FREE training manual which contains every lecture in full – there is no need to take notes.

ACCOUNTANT

Ell Lilly and Company Limited is a subsidiary of one of the world's major producers of ethical pharmaceuticals.

Due to internal promotions, we require: Two progressive accountants to fill positions in the Management Accounting Department.

(1) A qualified accountant, A.C.W.A., C.A., or A.C.C.A. is required to direct the operations of the cost accounting department and to assist the Management Accountant in further developing the current modern techniques of reporting and the presentation of management information. Salary range envisaged £1,600-£2,000 on appointment but negotiable above this range for the exceptional man.

(2) A partly-qualified accountant, having reached an intermediate stage in his studies and wishing to further his practical knowledge in advanced management accounting with a production cost bias. We would also encourage him to pursue his studies. He will report to the Cost Accountant and eventually assume responsibility for a section of the department. Salary envisaged £1,400-£1,800 on appointment.

The Company is marketing-orientated and operates a sophisticated financial planning and control system, Budgetary Control and Standard Costing, involving three diverse production facilities. Both men would be instrumental in the development of these accounting systems, participate in profit planning and forecasting, product planning and become involved in corporate planning. With Lilly, cost accounting does not stop at the routine compilation of works costs, but also actively contributes towards profitability in the fields of capital control, value analysis, stock control, product addition considerations, pricing and the development of official statistics.

We have recently installed a Honeywell computer and 1968/69 will involve the programming of the accounting systems.

We are to the fore of an industry which has an immediate exciting and interesting future for the accountant.

If you are interested in either of these jobs, please write or telephone for an application form and a brief account of the Company to:

Personnel Manager Eli Lilly & Co Ltd Basingstoke, Hants Tel. Basingstoke 3241

What is Giro?

How does Giro work?

Your client can receive

Giro is a simple system for transferring money that will organize and streamline all your client's financial affairs. If he's a Giro account-holder any of his customers can pay him through a post office. If his customers are account-holders too, payments are made by a simple transfer between accounts on instructions through the post. Standing orders can be arranged. (Giro also offers a special automatic debit transfer service of which details are available.) All transactions are cleared within 24 hours at the Giro Centre.

of account for every day that his account changes.

What does Giro cost?

Nothing. There's a small fee for stationery. but that's all. In return, your client will receive the services of the best-organized banking service going—National Giro.

When should your client join?

Giro officially opens in the autumn, but now is the time to persuade your client to go over to Giro. Now-not later, because only if he opens a Giro account now will he be in a position to take full advantage of all the Giro services, the moment Giro opens.

Extel TAXATION SERVICES

CAPITAL ISSUES

WITH

STOCK MARKET PRICES

The third edition of Extel's unique service will be published at the end of April. This will cover the fiscal years 1965/66, 1966/67 and 1967/68, to be supported during 1968/69 by three cumulative supplements in July, October and January as usual.

The new edition will contain details of all fixed interest stocks and government securities, thus creating the only fully comprehensive list of all quoted securities in the U.K. and Eire, together with their 6th April 1965 valuations adjusted where necessary.

Inland Revenue inspectors throughout the country will again be using the service during 1968/69, thus demonstrating the Revenue's confidence in a service which is now regarded as the standard work on the valuation of quoted securities for Capital Gains Tax purposes.

Subscription for the 1968/69 fiscal year £10.

DIVIDEND RECORD

The 1967/68 edition of the annual Dividend Record will also be available at the end of April. This will give details of the dividends paid during 1967/68 on both the Preference and Ordinary Share Capital of all Companies quoted in the U.K. and Eire, together with the relevant dates for payment, entitlement, ex-div. and financial year end. The rate of tax applicable to each dividend is shown and scrip and rights issues are also indicated as a further useful guide.

The Dividend Record is an essential complement to the Capital Issues Service and is designed to ease the tedious burden of tax returns.

Cost of the 1967/68 Dividend Record £15.

Both volumes may be taken together at the special rate of £20 and are offered on approval for fourteen days.

Budget Reflections

NE of the themes of critics of the Budget was that if the Government had been a little quicker off the mark with increased and extended taxes on consumption, the actual changes made on March 19th need not have been so savage. Ministers had been threatening these increases so long that it would have been extraordinary had the threats not produced the rush to spend savings that has characterized the last few months. Anyone visiting shops recently – especially those selling consumer durables – will have noticed how bare they had become by the time the axe fell. According to one Member of Parliament, the number of imported cars in January nearly doubled – from 6,000 to 10,000 – while car exports fell from 48,000 to 41,000. At the same time there were big withdrawals from building societies.

The manner of selection for increases in direct taxation is somewhat bewildering. Cigarette smoking is generally regarded as a luxury which is also injurious to health but the increase in tax, read in that context, seems to be very small. Soft drinks, children's sweets, household utensils, clothes, soap, are all now more heavily taxed, while beer goes scot free.

In one breath the Chancellor admitted the many anomalies of the selective employment tax and increased it by 50 per cent. This called forth protests even from Government supporters, notably the Co-operative Society men. The day after the Budget, however, the President of the Board of Trade announced one small concession in SET. It is to be remitted in respect of hotels, inns, boarding houses and similar establishments having not less than four guest bedrooms, provided that they are in 'certain rural parts of development areas which face special problems because the proportion of employees engaged in manufacturing industries is exceptionally low'. The refunds will be made in respect of tax payments made on or after September 2nd this year.

The concession is expected to cost about £1 million in a full year. Bearing in mind that the tax would be an expense of carrying on the business, and therefore would be deductible for income tax and corporation tax purposes, this concession is very minor indeed.

On the same day Mr Crosland promised further help to the tourist trade. He expected the number of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom to increase from four million last year to six million in 1970, and he wanted to ensure that there would be adequate hotel accommodation for them. Accordingly the experimental hotel loans scheme was to be replaced by a much more ambitious scheme for assisting new capital investment in hotels, consisting of hotel development grants and loans for new hotels, for bedroom extensions to existing hotels, and for certain items of fixed plant and equipment.

The grants for new hotels and major extensions, and the improvement grants for certain plant and equipment, will be at the rate of 20 per cent, except in development areas where the rate will be 25 per cent. Loan assistance will be on the lines of the existing scheme, though less restricted in scope. The new grants and loan assistance will be confined to hotels outside London with not less than ten letting rooms; in London twenty-five rooms. At the same time power will be sought to compel hotels to be registered so that more information can be made available to travellers.

On Budget day plus two, it fell to the unhappy Mr Shore, Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, to speak about the Government's incomes policy and a rough passage he had. Questioned about the proposed  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent ceiling on wage rises, he found himself in some difficulty about shop-floor agreements for piecework and more complicated matters of that kind which sometimes escape the attention of economic theorists.

The Minister's vagueness called forth a withering attack from the Opposition benches where one member spoke of a policy 'cooked up in an ivory tower by theoretical schoolmasters who know not the first thing about the working and problems of British industry'. The Government's proposed statutory powers of compulsion were said to be not a substitute for voluntary co-operation, but rather a buttress to it, and one member observed that if either would work the other would be unnecessary anyway.

The sacred figure of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent is also to be applied to dividends, and any company (not being a close company, investment trust company, or wholly-owned subsidiary) which wants to go above that figure will have to seek Treasury permission.

Finally, rents also have to be fitted into the Procrustean bed. Mr Shore admitted candidly that controlled rents are already frozen - indeed, they are frozen at a figure which bears no relation to the current commercial value of the accommodation. He went on to say that rents regulated under the Rent Act 1965 could rise or fall, but in fact they can only rise if the Rent Officer or the rent assessment committee so decide; moreover, the 'fair' rent so fixed must not take into account any scarcity value. However, even 'fair' rents are not to be paid if that means an increase above the  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent figure which has been handed down on the tablets. Any substantial increase fixed by the statutory machinery for fair rents is to be phased over a period; the rent-fixing machinery itself is not to be interfered with.

An interesting point in this connection arose in a case reported on another page in this issue. Flats in a block were let on terms which included the imposition of a service charge based on actual cost to the landlord. SET has, of course, increased the cost of those services considerably. Is the rent-fixing machinery to give any weight to this? The Divisional Court has said 'yes'. However, landlords who provide services had better beware, for if new imposts of the Government put up the cost of those services, the new additional rent control legislation may well prevent them from recovering this from the tenants, notwithstanding that the contract in question may, in good faith, have been made long before either the  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent ceiling or the Rent Act itself were thought of.

One of the embarrassing aspects, for the Government, of the price freeze is that local authorities providing subsidized housing have been forced by rising costs to put up rents, not to the economic letting value of the property, but merely to recover the rising costs. This has been frowned on in high places, albeit that the only alternative facing the unfortunate local councils is to recover the deficit by imposing additional rates on those who do not enjoy the benefit of subsidized housing.

Power is now to be taken to secure early warning of local authority rent increases, and also to enable the Government to intervene 'in exceptional cases, so as to moderate or phase increases which they regard as unduly high'. The Government is already awaiting the report of the Prices and Incomes Board on certain local authority rent increases and it will be interesting to see the Board's findings.

In the course of the debate following Mr Shore's opening speech, an Opposition member said he thought public spending might be brought under control by having modern methods of Government accounting. The present system of public accounting, he said, was one of checking the figures after expenditure had taken place. But a system of 'proper management accounting' should be established and applied to government. Otherwise the Chancellor was powerless to control the growth of public spending.

On Monday, Mr JOHN DIAMOND, Chief Secretary to the Treasury, gave more details of the Budget changes. Estate duty exemption for gifts on marriage is cut down to a maximum of £1,000, except that the parties to the marriage and their parents may give up to £5,000 each. Trust beneficiaries who pay 'special charge' on trust income will be able to recover it from the trustees. Anyone who tries to cut down his 1967–68 income to avoid the charge is to be thwarted by special legislation.

Mr DIAMOND said he expected the Finance Bill to be published in two weeks' time.

SET and 'Fair Rent'

THE Rent Act 1965 provides for the fixing of a 'fair rent' and states that regard is to be had to 'all the circumstances'. Sums payable by the tenant to the landlord for services have to be included. The rent assessment committee has to make such inquiries as it thinks fit and must consider any information or representation made to it. These provisions were the subject of dispute in Metropolitan Properties Co Ltd v. Noble, about the proper rents to be paid for flats in a block known as Hyde Park Mansions, Marylebone Road, London NW.

The landlord put in figures for services totalling £20,243. They included wages (£14,529), insurances, staircase lighting, and porters' expenses, as well as cleaning materials, uniforms, window-cleaning, fire-extinguisher rental, and flats for the head porter, housekeeper and engineer. The landlord also added 10 per cent for management charges.

The rent assessment committee struck off 50 per cent for central heating on the ground that it was inefficient, and this decision was upheld. However, the committee declined to allow anything for management charges in respect of the services (as distinct from the building) or for selective employment tax paid in respect of the employees at the flats. The landlord had the case remitted to the Divisional Court for that Court's opinion.

The Divisional Court said, on March 20th, that the case must be remitted to the assessment committee to reconsider its decision. The committee had misdirected itself in law in holding that the service charge element should not include management charges.

A somewhat piquant situation seems to have developed about selective employment tax. The committee had allowed National Insurance contributions for employees on the ground that these enured for the employees' benefit, whereas SET did not. To this the Divisional Court made the rejoinder that what had to be considered was the cost to the landlord, not the benefit to the employee. It was a perfectly proper item to be included in the service charge.

Institute's Business Game for Sixth Formers

THE business game for sixth formers sponsored by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales with the co-operation of I.C.T. Ltd enters its last phase on April 5th when three school teams play off the finals for the Institute's Challenge Shield.

The game opened in January, as announced in The Accountant of January 27th, with twenty-seven teams taking part. Eighteen teams were eliminated following the first heat last month and the remaining nine teams are currently awaiting the results of the second heat. The successful teams so far are from Abingdon School, Cardiff High School, Downside School, Dulwich College, Eton College, Leeds Grammar School, Manchester Grammar School, Marlborough College and St Dunstan's College. The finalists on April 5th will be the three teams producing the best results in the second heat.

Films of the schools' boards of directors in action are scheduled to be shown on the BBC2 money programme on April 4th.

Tax Relief for Life Assurance

THE proposals regarding tax relief for life assurance which were outlined by the Chancellor in his Budget Speech have now been amplified in a statement issued by the Inland Revenue. Full details of the proposals will appear in due course in the Finance Bill.

The Revenue state that relief from income tax will be allowed for premiums on policies effected after March 19th 1968, only if the policy satisfies certain new conditions (as well as the conditions prescribed by the existing law). The proceeds of policies effected after March 19th which do not satisfy the new conditions will be subject to surtax.

Under the proposals concerning endowment assurance, the period to maturity must be at least ten years; the premiums must be payable at annual or shorter intervals over at least ten years, and the premiums payable in any one year (i) must not exceed twice the amount of the premiums payable in any other year, and (ii) must not exceed one-eighth of the total premiums payable under the policy. In the event of death before the maturity date, the policy must guarantee a capital sum equal to at least 75 per cent of the total premiums which would have been payable over the whole period of the policy if the death had not occurred.

With regard to whole life assurance, the premiums must be payable at annual or shorter intervals over life or at least ten years. The premiums payable in any one year (i) must not exceed twice the amount of the premiums payable in any other year, and (ii) must not exceed one-eighth of the total premiums payable or, where premiums are payable over life, of the total premiums payable in an assumed period of ten years.

If the assurance is for a fixed term exceeding ten years, the premiums must be payable at annual or shorter intervals over at least ten years and the premiums payable in any one year (i) must not exceed twice the amount of the premiums payable in any other year, and (ii) must not exceed one-eighth of the total premiums payable under the policy. If the assurance is for a fixed term not exceeding ten years, no conditions as to the spread of premiums are proposed, provided that the surrender value (if any) cannot exceed the premiums paid.

In special cases such as exceptional mortality risk, where an enhanced premium is payable, the additional amount will be disregarded in considering whether the conditions described above are satisfied. There will be no restriction on mortgage protection policies taken out in respect of the policy-holder's own home where the sum assured reduces to nothing, while policies taken out in connection with bona fide pension arrangements will not be affected.

The proceeds of a policy which does not satisfy the new conditions will be chargeable to surtax on the maturity of the policy or when the value of the policy is realized in any way. Conversely, the proceeds of a policy which satisfies the new conditions will be chargeable to surtax if the policy is surrendered, or converted into a paid-up policy, or sold, within ten years of its inception, or three-quarters of its full term, whichever period is the shorter.

The amount to be charged to surtax will normally be the gain as represented by the excess of the proceeds over the premiums paid. Where, however, the charge arises on the death of the assured, the proceeds will be deemed to be equal to the surrender value of the policy immediately before death. The rate of surtax to be applied to the gain will be determined by 'top-slicing', i.e. by reference to the number of years that have elapsed since the inception of the policy.

Policies taken out on or before March 19th, 1968, will not be affected.

Accountant Director Compensated for Breach of Service Agreement

AFIRM employing a £2,500 a year assistant managing director had 'jumped the gun' by announcing that he was resigning, Lord Justice Harman said in the Court of Appeal on Friday last. The director, Mr Charles Gordon Buchanan, chartered accountant, of Fern Bank, Great Corby, Carlisle, had not in fact agreed to resign, said the Lord Justice. He was one of three directors made redundant under a merger and had entered hospital before negotiations had been completed on terms of compensation.

The Court dismissed with costs an appeal by a poultry trade firm, E. F. Fairbairn Holdings Ltd, of Willow Holme, Carlisle, from a judgment of Mr Justice Thesiger on July 28th, holding that there had been a breach of Mr Buchanan's service agreement in 1962. The judge ordered that damages should be assessed by an Official Referee.

Mr Buchanan had been employed from 19:8 under a twelve-years' service agreement at a salary cf £2,000 rising to £3,250. Lord Justice Harman said that when the merger was contemplated Mr Buchanan had agreed that he should resign. However, he never agreed unconditionally to resign, and he assumed that proposals would be put to him for compensation under his agreement which ended in 1969. Although he later left the firm his right to compensation still remained. Lord Justice Salmon agreed and said the appeal was virtually unarguable. Lord Justice Winn also agreed.

Profit on Silver Bullion not Assessable

NOW that capital gains tax is with us, the fiercely disputed question as to whether an isolated transaction constitutes an adventure in the nature of trade is no longer quite so important. The recent decision of Mr Justice Goff in Wisdom v. Chamberlain has therefore come a little late. It establishes that one can buy silver bullion as a hedge against inflation and resell it at a profit, without thereby carrying on a trade.

Mr Norman Wisdom, the well-known actor, in 1961 had capital assets of something under £200,000 and an income of some £40,000 a year. His accountant was already worried about devaluation of sterling and

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

THE broker who handles our fire insurance was so upset at the increase in this year's premium that he came along in person to explain it. 'These last two years have been ghastly, old boy, positively gruesome,' he said plaintively. 'Underwriters have been shockingly mauled, what with fires, and hurricanes, and wrecks and whatnot. You can't help fee ing sorry for the poor beggars, honestly.'

I felt sorrier for ourselves at the sight of the grossly swollen figure on the statement, which I returned to him with dignity. My heart bled for the insurers, I said with mock sympathy, and personally I asked nothing better than to pay them all this and more; but my board was adamant. We exchanged sun-fry polite insincerities and he departed unabashed.

The managing director looked venomous when he heard the news. Something had to be done, he said. What about rebates, no-claim bonuses, long-term discounts, and so forth? No avenue must be left unexplored. What concessions were possible?

I summoned the maintenance engineer who shares this particular responsibility with me, and we reported jointly. The premium had crept up year by year despite our best efforts. We had percentage rebates for water and sand buckets strategically installed on wall-racks, and for fire extinguishers per hundred square feet. Then there was the additional rebate for our sprinkler system, he explained hurriedly, whereupon the M.D. gave us an unnecessary lecture on the damage done to dress fabrics last summer when the west wing sprinklers blasted off accidentally. However, these discounts were only chicken-feed, he declared.

Get to the main problem; how had the total indemnity figure for our buildings and contents been assessed?

This is always the key question. Original cost figures being obviously useless, we naturally cover ourselves for replacement cost and we've had ten-yearly surveys carried out by expert valuers. The flaw in this arrangement is that their estimates are really irrelevant, since we'd never rebuild to the same design. Our century-old façade with its mellow redbrick and carved stone decorations, with the uneven floor-levels due to neighbouring property being incorporated at intervals, would assuredly be replaced by a modern glass-and-concrete montrosity at a quite different price.

Naturally, and high time too, said the engineer superciliously. Properly balanced central heating with air-conditioning, drive-in loading bays and up-to-date elevators on a civilized scale, would be a wonderful change. He elaborated his ideas feelingly. Perhaps he could organize a staff fire brigade, with fireproof suits and respirators; and arrange practice drills in liaison with the local brigade headquarters. All this, with adequate fire-escape installations would be good for at least another 5 per cent rebate, surely, if these insurance chaps were decent types at all.

His trouble is that he's an empire-builder, like most engineers. It's not so much greed as conceit, really; it's just that they're blissfully conscious that they know more than anybody else about almost everything.

The managing director listened in brooding silence for a while, then asked about the chances of getting a cheaper quotation elsewhere, so I took my turn in delivering another unnecessary lecture on fly-by-night companies and men of straw. We finally terminated our conference with a pleasant feeling of having attacked the problem energetically but in fact we did nothing new or constructive. I'll be paying the premium when it falls due, and no doubt we'll repeat the whole performance all over again next year.

wanted him to have some asset which would maintain its value in terms of the dollar and would be easy to sell.

The accountant decided that his client ought to buy £200,000 worth of silver bullion but at first he could get only £100,000 worth. Then in March 1962 the silver brokers agreed to sell £200,000 worth on the condition of buying back the first £100,000 worth at a loss to Mr Wisdom of £30,000. The purchase was financed by borrowed money at a high rate of interest. Later in 1962 the £ recovered and the price of silver jumped, so that Mr Wisdom's holding could be sold at a profit of £48,000, ignoring the interest on the loan.

The General Commissioners, upholding an assessment on this profit, concluded that (1) the original intention was to hedge against inflation; (2) at the time of the second purchase the fear of devaluation had subsided and other considerations were uppermost; and (3) seeing that the bullion was useless, produced no income, was not a long-term investment and was financed by borrowing at a high rate, the transaction was an adventure in the nature of trade.

Allowing the appeal with costs, his lordship said that the conclusions were not warranted by the primary facts found. In particular the high rate of interest was of little moment to a taxpayer with Mr Wisdom's high rate of income tax and surtax.

A Look at the New Capital Allowances Act

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

THE 524 sections and twenty-five schedules of the Income Tax Act 1952 represented a high-water mark in the agglomeration of law on direct tax. Those thinkers who, like the late Teilhard de Chardin, see a parallel with the workings of natural selection in modern ways, might have predicted that the unwieldiness of that monumental creation of the Parliamentary draftsman signalled the end of an era.

The lighter-weight and relatively brief text evinced by the type of statute fit to survive first became apparent in the Income Tax Management Act 1964 and the new trend is continued with the publication of the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act 1968 and the Capital Allowances Act 1968. In the course of the debate in Parliament which ushered in these additions to the statute book, the Solicitor-General stated that the intention was to consolidate the income tax law as a whole.

This does not mean that the Capital Allowances Act will at a later stage, as it were, be re-consolidated into a new consolidation measure. On the contrary, it is simply an instalment in a wider and broader process of consolidating the law in the complex and difficult field of direct tax. Hence it may be assumed that the Capital Allowances Act represents a foundation stone which may be expected to support a superstructure of amendments for many years to come.

The new Act appears to have been drafted in obedience to some self-denying ordinance which limits the number of sections to exactly one hundred. There are in addition twelve schedules, some of which make strange bedfellows. Thus Schedule 4 is concerned with the writing-down percentages to be applied to machinery and plant for 1968-69, while in Schedule 8 we read with a touch of nostalgia about assets transferred under the Coal Industry Nationalization Act 1946. Indeed, on turning to section 49 one finds references to the Income Tax Act 1918, the Finance Acts of 1932 and 1938, and even 'the appointed day' reads as

Principles of interpretation

These remarks serve to indicate the heterogeneous collection of legislation which has been carved out of the existing law and linked together in a new numerical order. It will be appropriate here to refer to the remarks of Lord Reid in C.I.R. v. Hinchy (39 A.T.C. 13; 38 T.C. 625) where he says it is no doubt true that every Act should be read as a whole, but that is because one assumes that in drafting one clause of a Bill the draftsman had in mind the language and substance of other clauses and attributes to Parliament a comprehension of the whole Act. But where, as here, quite incongruous provisions are lumped together and it is impossible to suppose that anyone, draftsman or Parliament, ever considered one of these sections in the light of another, then according to the view expressed by Lord Reid, it would be just as misleading to base conclusions on the different language of different sections as it is to base conclusions on the different language of sections in different Acts.

It will be seen from this that the correct course to follow, in endeavouring to unlock the meaning of a section with such aid as may be obtained, is not to turn to other sections of the Act for assistance (in the absence of specific interpretation sections). Instead, as Lord Reid observed, since one must presume that a consolidating Act makes no substantial change in the previous law unless forced by the words of the new Act to a contrary conclusion, it is proper therefore in interpreting it to look at the earlier provisions which it consolidated.

Meanings in previous Acts

A recent case of some interest in this connection is that of Barentz v. Whiting (44 A.T.C. 1; 42 T.C. 267) where in the Court of Appeal, Willmer, L.J., referred to an Act of 1920 and pointed out that a possible ambiguity existing in an earlier Act could be removed by the terms of a later Act. These remarks were made in the course of construing section 214 of the Income Tax Act 1952. Harman, L.J., said that it was quite true that you must look at the Act of 1952, which was a consolidating Act, and start with the assumption that it did not change the law.

It was argued that there was an ambiguity in the words 'the purpose' rather infelicitously used in that context. Thereupon it was legitimate to look back to the sources from which the consolidating Act was derived and these were two – the Act of 1920 and the Act of 1924. Hence, if a study of the Act of 1920 still disclosed a doubt as to the interpretation to be adopted, one might resolve that doubt by looking at the Act of 1924. This implies that the later Act has adopted an interpretation of the earlier Act and it may be assumed that the latter enacts the meaning thus selected as authoritative.

Rule regarding interpretation

It is, however, one thing to go back to the words of previous statutes in order to discover the meaning of the consolidating statute. It is another matter to claim that an interpretation placed on the earlier statute is necessarily binding by reason alone of the absence of any change in those words when the consolidated statute was introduced.

In Odgers on Construction of Deeds and Statutes it is said that the rule whereby earlier interpretations are carried forward as applicable to the re-enactment of the relevant words in the consolidation statute is a rule which must be applied carefully. It can probably only be safely so applied where the provisions of the repealed Act are substantially reproduced in the consolidating statute and where there has been an authoritative judicial interpretation over a period from which the Court ought not now to depart.

In general, the new Capital Allowances Act comes into force and has effect as respects allowances and charges falling to be made for chargeable periods ending after April 5th, 1968. In this connection a chargeable period means an accounting period of a company or a year of assessment. It is proposed, therefore, to review the meaning of certain phrases used in the Act as interpreted in cases based on the antecedent legislation.

The first chapter of the Consolidated Act is concerned with industrial buildings and structures. Section 7 repeats the former definition of that term. In C.I.R. v. Lambhill Ironworks Ltd (29 A.T.C. 240; 31 T.C. 393) the question was examined as to the point at which the manufacturing process begins. Section 7 (3) declares that the term 'industrial building or structure' does not include any building or structure in use as, or as part of, a dwelling-house, retail shop, showroom, hotel or office or for any purpose ancillary thereto. In the Lambhill case it was said for the Inland Revenue that the scale drawings and blueprints prepared in the drawing office by skilled draughtsmen and other technicians were merely pictorial orders for the goods and that the industrial process only began when the drawings reached the template loft or the assembly or erecting shop or some of the other parts of the premises.

A secondary argument was that the drawing office was used for a purpose ancillary to the purposes of the general office. In the Court of Session, Lord Cooper refused to distinguish between the scale drawings and the patterns and templates which followed from them. Again, the fact that a few of the employees in the drawing office were occupied in the preparation of drawings for tenders did not outweigh the dominant purpose in which it was engaged. He observed that the quality or character of the drawing office as an industrial building or structure could only be determined by looking at the building as a whole and by reference to its predominant purpose or use. It would be quite impracticable to attempt to impart to such a building a different character because a small proportion of the men employed in it were engaged in work of a different character.

Lord Keith also took the view that the purpose for which the drawing office was used was directly associated with the manufacturing operations carried out in the company's works and that it was in no way ancillary to the work done in the general office.

The recent decision of the House of Lords in Lord Advocate v. Reliant Tool Co ([1968] I W.L.R. 205) offers an interesting sequel, in the context of the selective employment tax. The Industrial Tribunal, in words which were judicially approved, stated that they were of opinion that to be engaged in the activities of manufacture of a product does not mean that one has to take the product through every stage of its creation from raw material to finished product. It is sufficient if one is responsible for any stage in the process of manufacture.

Lord MacDermott commented on the Revenue argument that while manufacturing activities did not mean all the processes which went to the production of the finished article, the term should include at least the process or processes that completed the manufacturing. This view he rejected, saying that if the performance of a part of the total process of producing a manufactured article comes within the word 'activities' then he could see no ground for thinking that a terminal process stood in a special or privileged position. Hence he would hold that activities which constitute a definite part but not the whole of the processes involved in the manufacture ranked equally as manufacture.

It should be borne in mind, however, that the Court reserved to itself the jurisdiction on the question as to what was the essential part of a process of manufacture. Lord MacDermott regarded it as a mixed question of law and fact as to whether a preliminary process, no matter how essential to a subsequent process of manufacture, could rank as part of the latter process, since this decision may depend on legal considerations involving the nature of the relationship between the preliminary and the subsequent processes.

In order to qualify as an industrial building it is required by section 7 (1) that the building or structure should be in use for the purposes of the trade or other undertaking described in the sub-paragraphs (a) to (i), with additional mention of any such building provided by the person carrying on the trade or undertaking for the welfare of workers employed therein and in use for that purpose.

Sub-paragraph (f) (iii) refers to the purposes of a trade which consists in the storage of goods or materials which having been manufactured or produced or subjected in the course of a trade to any process have not yet been delivered to any purchaser.

Qualifications of a warehouse

In Dale v. Johnson Brothers (32 T.C. 487) the company had a warehouse in Northern Ireland in which they stored the products of English manufacturers. Sheil, J., referred to terms in the agreements between manufacturer and warehouse agent whereby the property in the goods passed on delivery at the warehouse. He laid stress on the phrase 'any purchaser' in the statute and pointed out that it was not necessary to look to the ultimate or 'true' purchaser. Furthermore, Mr Justice Sheil noted that the use of the building must be for a trade and, so far as the use is concerned, the trade must be a storage trade. It would not do that the trade was storage plus something else – it must be simply a keeping or custody.

The function of the warehouse in that case was in the nature of a distribution centre for goods which had in fact entered the distribution process. An interesting contrast to this decision appears from the case of Saxone, Lilley & Skinner (Holdings) Ltd v. C.I.R. (46 A.T.C. 14; 45 A.T.C. 215) in which the Court of Session reviewed the position where a group operated, through a separate company, a central warehouse for storage for short periods of time of the products of the group not yet delivered to any purchaser and products bought by a member of the group from both inside and outside the group.

It was contended that to qualify the building for the purposes of the industrial buildings allowance it must be wholly used for the purpose of a storage trade to satisfy the statutory conditions. Hence as the building in question was also used for storing unqualified goods it could not qualify, in the absence of any provision for apportionment. Lord Clyde rejected this argument, stating that on a proper construction of what is now section 7 (1) of the Capital Allowances Act 1968 a building may be an industrial building or structure if it is used for the purpose of a trade of storing qualifying goods even though it is in addition used for the purpose of a trade of storing unqualified goods as well, subject, of course, always to the rule regarding de minimis.

Lord Clyde observed that there was nothing in the section which required exclusive use, a view endorsed by the House of Lords. The test was not actual occupation of the building but use for the purposes of the trade of storing certain kinds of goods. Lord Cameron made the point that a building or structure used for storage purposes might well, at any given moment, either be totally empty or only partly filled but in any circumstances no one could effectively deny that the building was in use for the purpose of the trade. The fact that a building might be occupied and simultaneously used for other non-qualifying purposes appeared to Lord Migdale to be irrelevant, unless the disparity of actual use between qualifying and non-qualifying purposes became so extreme as effectively to negative the proposition that the building was in use for a qualifying purpose.

Part of a building or structure

Lord Migdale also made a reference to the provisions of what is now subsection (4) of section 7 from which it appeared to him clear that part of a building meant an identified or divided part of a building as contrasted with a building whose total space was available for use and from time to time was in fact occupied for storage of qualifying articles.

Subsection (4) provides that where a part of the whole of the building or structure is and part is not an industrial building or structure, and the capital expenditure which has been incurred on the construction of the second mentioned part is not more than one-tenth of the total capital expenditure then the whole building and every part is to be treated as an industrial building.

Sub-paragraph (e) in section 7 (1) refers to one of the most widespread categories of trade, namely, a trade which consists in the manufacture of goods or materials or the subjection of goods or materials to any process.

Limited scope of industrial activities

In this connection a case was heard which to some tastes might appear somewhat macabre. In Bourne v. Norwich Crematorium Ltd (46 A.T.C. 43) Mr Justice Stamp had the task of reviewing a finding by the General Commissioners for Norwich City that the furnace chamber and chimney tower of the crematorium were used for the subjection of goods or materials to a process so as to entitle the company concerned to an industrial buildings allowance. The learned judge protested against a misuse of language which would require him to distort rather than to construe the words of the Act, and he concluded that the consumption by fire of the mortal remains of homo sapiens was not the subjection of goods or materials to a process within the meaning of the statute.

Perhaps the passage in the definition section which offers the widest scope for dispute is that of subsection (5) which provides that the expression 'retail shop' includes any premises of a similar character where retail trade or business (including repair work) is carried on. The meaning to be given to this limitation was examined by the Court of Session in Kilmarnock Equitable Co-operative Society Ltd v. C.I.R. (45 A.T.C. 205) in conjunction with the question as to whether the building to house the machinery for screening coal and packing it in bags should be regarded as in use for the purposes of a trade consisting of the subjection of coal to a process.

Retail shop

Lord Cameron discussed the question as to what were the purposes of a retail shop. It seemed to him that these were narrower than those of a retail business and that they were just to enable members of the public to resort to a place where they might see and purchase goods or materials by retail and also to serve as a place of exhibition and sale of a shopkeeper's wares.

The Revenue argument, on the other hand, went much too far and if accepted would lead to the conclusion that to carry out in a building any process (such as the packaging of sweets) which it was intended would make the article fit for sale by retail would be such use of the building as to rank as ancillary to the purposes of a retail shop, even if a whole-saler intervened between the manufacturer and the retailer.

In the Kilmarnock case there was no resort by the public to the premises to buy packaged coal. Indeed the premises were not contiguous or adjacent to a retail shop, still less to any retail shop owned by the Society in question. This provided a contrast to the facts in such cases as Finn v. Kerslake ([1931] A.C. 457), a rating case in which it was held that a bakehouse was ancillary to a baker's shop in circumstances where the nature of the whole hereditament was under consideration.

Again it appeared to Lord Cameron that the purpose for which the building was used was to further the Society's trade as a merchant by using it to process materials which enabled them to be disposed of to the best commercial advantage, whether by wholesale or retail. That was a purpose which might assist the Society's retail business, if any, but he did not think it could fairly be said that it was one which was ancillary, that is, subservient or subordinate to the purposes of a retail shop. (To be concluded.)

Flexible Computerized Business Game

by ARTHUR J. C. GRANT, M.Sc.(Econ.), F.C.I.S.

ABUSINESS GAME has been used for a number of years in the Polytechnic School of Commerce in the advanced courses in business studies. In the first place the necessary calculations were performed on a desk calculating machine, but right from the start the possibility of computerizing the game was borne in mind. The necessary program has been developed and tested over the past two years and is now fully operational. In transferring the calculations to the computer it was possible to introduce factors making for greater realism which previously would have involved excessive calculation.

It is thought that details of the game may be of interest to those who are concerned with the preparation of business games or who are interested as tutors or participants.

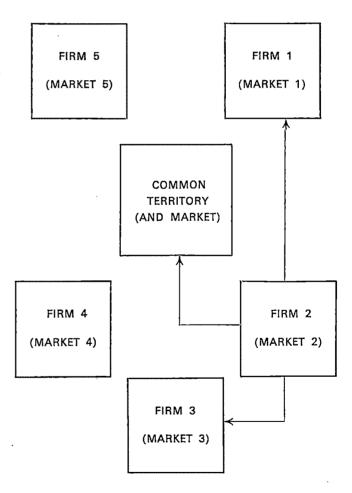

The game is designed for weekly or bi-weekly meetings over a session, for students taking a full-time course in business studies. The processing takes up to forty minutes on an IBM 1620 computer (it would be very much less on a larger computer with a line-printer) which can be undertaken at a time when the computer is free. There is accordingly no necessity to book the computer for a day or two for intensive playing of the game, with the consequent dislocation involved. Moreover, it is possible for teams from separate colleges or from different firms to take part even though they might be operating at a distance.

Scope of the game

As the number of students on a course may vary from year to year, the game can be played with from three to eight teams each representing a business firm. Using a computer with larger core storage, the number of teams may be increased or the processing time reduced by cutting down the number of linked programs involved.

As the game has been designed for use by students who are following a full-time business studies course, the complexity of the game increases over the session as regards production methods, markets available and products sold. In this way the students become familiar with the environment of the game and gradually apply the knowledge and techniques which they are acquiring in other parts of their course.

The area is divided into a number of territories. There is a central territory, known as the Common Territory, which is a market for the products but contains no producers, and there is one territory for each simulated company, or firm, which is also a market. The situation may be illustrated as follows for a game with five firms:

Initially a firm may only sell in its own territory, then in the Common Territory and finally in its adjacent competitors' territories. Thus Firm 2 can ultimately sell in its own territory, the Common Territory and the territories of Firm 1 and Firm 3. To Firm 2 the territory of Firm 1 is known as Competitor's (—) Territory and the territory of Firm 3 as Competitor's (+) Territory. Finally, long-term contracts are put out to tender and the lowest tender is accepted. These contracts involve marketing opportunities additional to those outlined above. Transport costs are involved in selling in territories other than the firm's home territory.

Capital

Each firm is initially provided with a capital of £150,000. To this is added the profits as they are made, and this is augmented by a subsidy payable during the first eight years of the game on sales in the firm's own territory. The expenses, including the purchase of machines, overheads, materials, wages, etc., have to be paid out of the capital available at the beginning of the year, whereas the revenue from sales is not received until the end of the year.

Overdraft facilities at 15 per cent per annum are available to firms, but participants are warned that they may expect the average return on capital employed to fall short of the overdraft rate. Machines and materials are normally available for use in the year after purchase but on payment of an additional 10 per cent they are available for immediate use.

Production

The capacity, costs and availability of different types of machines, the labour costs and times at which these will increase are notified to the firms at the beginning of the game so that the participants may have an opportunity of forward planning so far as production is concerned. Since engaging, training and dismissing labour involves the firm in a certain amount of expenditure careful planning of production is highly desirable.

Sales

In a new market a firm is at first required to put all its output up for sale, and the price is determined by market forces. Thereafter the firm is required to fix its price in the market and the level of sales is determined by the interaction of the total demand and the price being charged by the firm's competitors. In this situation the firm may either accumulate stocks of finished goods or be oversold. The firm may accumulate stocks of finished goods without any warehousing charges or risk of deterioration, but holding stocks will, of course, tie up scarce capital.

In order to cope with the position where the firm is oversold, it is always required to indicate the priority of its sales. This will indicate the order in which markets are to be satisfied with the available goods. Where a firm is oversold, the unsatisfied demand is reflected back to the other firms selling in that particular market. Advertising is permitted, its effect being partly to expand the market and partly to attract sales from competitors.

A second product is introduced at the end of ten years. The demand for this product behaves in the same way as that of the first product, so that all the participants have learned with regard to the marketing of the first product may be used in the marketing of the second. The only change in the demand for the products over the course of the game is an annual increase of 1 per cent.

Market research

After eight decisions — equivalent to eight years' operations — market research reports become available. Nine different types of market research are available, providing different combinations of items of information at varying cost. Among the items are the capacity, stocks and number of machines of each type in the industry, as well as information regarding the sales of all the firms in a particular territory, or all the selling activities of a particular firm. The firm is required to indicate in one year the type of report, if any, which it requires the following year.

Members of the firm are therefore required to assess the usefulness of various items of information in particular circumstances in relation to the cost of obtaining this information.

Tenders

From the seventeenth year onwards, tenders are regularly invited for long-term contracts (three to five years) for the supply of the two products, Odds and Ends. The firm indicates the price at which it desires to tender, with its other decisions, and is notified the following year of the firm by which, and the price at which, the tender has been accepted. If two firms tender at the lowest price, the computer program will select the firm after comparing the spare capacity and resources of the firms concerned.

Participants are thus given an opportunity of gaining experience in price-fixing which no static exercise could possibly offer, since it is done in a dynamic situation with other markets to consider at the same time.

Administrative expenses

Each firm is charged annually with an amount to cover its administrative expenses. This item is related to the volume of activity of the firm and the degree of control exercised over its activities. The first element is determined by reference to the number of machines it is operating, the extent to which it is engaging, training or dismissing workers, and the number of markets in which it is selling.

The second element is related to the amount of information which the members of the firm require concerning the activities of their firm. By dispensing with all information regarding expenses other than the gross total, administrative costs can be reduced. Similarly by dispensing with all information regarding quantities sold and prices in individual markets other than the total revenue, greater savings can be made in administrative costs.

Participants are consequently forced to compare the usefulness of information for control in a given situation against its likely cost. This is an important consideration today, when information is often available on a scale hardly envisage even a decade ago. The questions remain as to what extent additional information is of assistance in controlling a business, and when this starts to become a hindrance in distracting attention from the more important items of information.

Operation of the game

The method of operation of the game is designed to place emphasis on decision-making rather than on mathematical ability; although a considerable volume of calculation is required if a firm is to be fully provided with costing data. One team has used the computer to calculate tables of cost data for a range of output with various types of machine.

The simplicity of indicating decisions is shown by the form which the teams are required to complete each week. It does, however, mean that the game should only be played by responsible students as it is easy to make decisions which would involve the firm in serious trouble if haphazard decisions were recorded. A team cannot make decisions involving machines or methods or markets which are not available at that stage of the game; the computer program amends such decisions to the nearest permissible decision. A completed decision form for Year 21 is illustrated by Form 1.

Since the Polytechnic game is processed on a computer with a comparatively small core store, the output of results consists only of the numerical part. The output is attached to printed forms giving the necessary detail of the items included which line up with the computer output (see accompanying specimen forms). With a larger computer and a line-printer the entire results could be printed out quickly with a much clearer layout.

In the case of the market research report (Form 2) the procedure is similar. To a printed form bearing details of any or all of the information which can be made available to the firms is attached the computer print-out on plain paper giving the market research information ordered by the firm.

Computer program

A punched card is prepared containing the number of revenue for the previous year between firms participating and the year of the game. Then profitable and the least profitable firm.

there are five cards for each decision form containing the data on these forms. In the first week of the game the cards are fed to the computer and the first computer program causes cards to be punched which form the input to the main program. The main program, which is a series of linked programs, causes the results, market research reports and balance sheets to be printed and a stack of cards to be punched to form part of the input for the following year.

In the second and subsequent years the card output from the previous year is placed behind the cards punched from the decision sheets before running the preliminary program.

(This division of the program into two parts may seem an unnecessary complication. Such would be the case with a larger computer, but with the one available it provides for the most economical use of the core store and therefore the fastest available processing time. Processing time increases over the course of the game from approximately twenty to forty minutes.)

Control of the game

The computer prints out abbreviated balance sheets for the firms showing the profit made during the year. Again, to economize on computer core store, only the figures are printed out for attachment to a printed sheet with the appropriate headings. There is space on each sheet for up to ten years' results, which are available at the discretion of the tutor for inspection by the teams.

The situation is sufficiently complex for it to be possible to produce legitimate balance sheets showing considerable variation in the annual profit figures. Varying methods of calculating depreciation, valuing stocks of finished goods and dealing with advertising, training and other expenditure creates this situation. The balance sheet produced by the computer is on a common basis for all firms and therefore gives scope for comparison. It provides a means of impressing on participants the limitations of financial statements and forces them to consider what form of statement is most satisfactory as a basis for decision-making. In the case of the computer program, 50 per cent of these expense items are written off each year on the diminishing balance method.

The game is designed as an exercise for groups of students over a session with approximately thirty weekly decisions, each representing a year's activity. It is necessary, therefore, to provide sufficient competition to exercise the participants but not so much as to drive any firm out of business. This is achieved automatically by including in the program a factor controlling the extent to which sales are lost to competitors as a result of differences in price, and the extent to which potential sales that a firm cannot supply are reflected back to competitors. This factor varies with the difference in revenue for the previous year between the most profitable and the least profitable firm.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

Controlling Clerical Costs

WITHIN the last few years indirect payroll costs have risen faster than direct payroll costs, and the ratio of indirect/direct will continue to increase with the advancement of automation and mechanization, the demand for more management information, and the desire for affluence.

Such conditions are ripe for Parkinson's Law and most indirect areas can be regarded as over-staffed or underproductive. Despite the fact that society is now showing an increasing respect for personal purchasing power and class atmosphere is slowly losing its boundaries, dissimilar 'blue collar' and 'white collar' attitudes prevail. While the 'blue collar' worker has in general now come to accept work study, and in many cases subsequent payment by results, the 'white collar' continues to look upon work study as something only to be practised on the 'blue collar'. However, work study is only a means of increasing productivity and its techniques are universal in application.

Work study

WORK STUDY

METHOD STUDY

leads to the establishment of a target time for the manufacture of a product or accomplishment of a service resulting mainly in:

- (1) the establishment of standard costs and subsequent budgetary control;
- (2) the ability accurately to schedule and plan;
- (3) management control information;
- (4) payment by results schemes;
  - (5) the setting of objectives.

All the above facets of work study are desirable in an office (with the possible exception of payment by results) and may indeed exist. However, it is undesirable to apply work study carte blanche in a new situation. A decision has to be taken as to which facet to apply. The short answer is to take the most economic course, which is the application of work measurement. Several reasons exist for this. Assume the redesign of an invoice has been chosen for method study; assume further that a new design is being considered. How many departments need be consulted about the change? How many people need be consulted about the change? How many amendments need to be made before the final format is accepted? How long would all this take?

The answer is that the main cost of an invoice is not the paper but the work involved, and the number of people and departments involved, in filling in and processing the invoice. Hence it is reasonable to assume that such objectives will take time to accomplish. Therefore the payback for method study in the office is a long-term proposition. On the other hand, the pay-back for work measurement is a short-term proposition. This fact has been grossly overlooked and the textbooks on work study do not enphasize this point.

However, care must be taken with the application of work study because of its associated human implications, and the slightly tainted reputation given to it by a few (mainly past) malpractices. In fact, in Britain work study in offices is usually referred to as organization and method, and most O. & M. groups concentrate on method improvement to overcome this problem. Systems analysis can also be regarded as work study with the computer in mind.

The fact that application of work measurement will bring more immediate and more substantial benefits was recognized by management consultants, by whom work measurement has been applied successfully both in the United States and the United Kingdom. Consultants, in the main, redesignated their work measurement applications because of the 'blue collar/white collar' differential, and they frowned on payment by result schemes. Hence some work measurement schemes in offices are referred to as 'variable factor programming' (successful in the Cooperative Insurance Society Limited, Philips Electrical Industries), or 'group capacity assessment' (successful in the indirect areas of Rolls-Royce, Hawker Siddeley and Plessey).

Successful areas of application include those involving clerks, office machine operators, typists, sales representatives, draughtsmen, computer programmers, and generally jobs up to around £1,500 per annum.

The main reason why office personnel are not achieving full utilization is not because they don't work hard enough, it is that their time is not properly planned and controlled. Supplementary to this there is in many cases a lack of motivation, because they do not know what, in fact, they should or could achieve. Figure 1 below represents a typical hour's work by a clerk.

Good advice on investment is so personal...

...surprising how many people would do best by getting the 'Big Seven' benefits of a building society.

People listen to you... on all sorts of topics, by no means the least of these being investment and savings. If you feel that your client or customer needs a high yield, utmost security yet good liquidity, isn't a building society the place for his money? These are just three of seven big advantages of putting money in a building society. All seven are important, and possibly the most important thing about them is that they can only be found together in a building society.

ONLY BUILDING SOCIETIES GIVE YOU THE 'BIG SEVEN' BENEFITS

- 1 Interest on a range of savings schemes is equivalent to well over 7% for the standard rate taxpayer because . . .
- 2 ... income tax is paid by the Building Society.
- 3 Utmost security; the money goes into the most solid of all investments: owner-occupied property.
- 4 Freedom from market fluctuations.
- 5 Easy withdrawals at short notice.
- 6 No charges, no expenses.
- 7 Over-the-counter service: swift, efficient and friendly.

The under-utilization is in most cases significant and only work measurement will show this up.

To achieve increased productivity without upsetting staff relationships is no easy task and it is wise not to do any work measurement with stop watches. This leaves available the following techniques:

- (a) historical data analysis
  - (b) activity sampling
  - (c) predetermined time systems.

Historical data analysis

This may be stating the obvious, but by analysing company records the volume of work and fluctuation of volume can be established. At the same time this will identify the units of output. This may be as far as the organization wishes to go. Historical data is cheap and easy to obtain, and although loose, can be used to forecast demands and control operations. If the data are extracted from records at peak times the data will be more relevant. The B.B.C. Costume Department did this type of analysis, which subsequently led to better scheduling and resource allocation.

Activity sampling

Activity sampling is an economic technique based on statistics. The operations of the department under study are classified into various categories, e.g.:

Filing
Typing
Duplicating
Posting
Telephoning
Miscellaneous Idle.

An observer walks round the office at random time intervals and notes which operations are being performed. The number of observations taken is critical and can be determined by formula or nomograph. At the end of the study the analysis would look something like Figure 3. Thus a quantitative picture of the day emerges. If the output figures are known the time per unit can be established.

Predetermined time systems

There are several predetermined time systems available, the best known and most universally used being Methods Time Measurement (M.T.M.). This system has been developed from filmed operations. All manual operations can be broken down into so-called fundamental motions like reach, grasp, move, position, release, disengage, turn, apply pressure, etc. These motions are further subdivided according to conditions, e.g. easy, fairly easy, difficult, length of reach, etc., and a time value is assigned to each motion. Hence all human motions have been classified into 400 different operations.

It is the job of the analyst to break the job down into each fundamental motion, categorize it and assign a time value. The summation of the elements will give the overall time for the job. The work is highly analytical and, unless repetitive, is not economic. However, by judicious combining of fundamental motions (e.g. 'reach, grasp, and release' becomes 'get') and reduction of the number of categories, the variety of possible combinations has been reduced to about thirty. This system is known as M.T.M. II. The main development work was done in Sweden, but the British M.T.M. Association are currently producing 'M.T.M. Office Data' to allow speedy and simple compilation of standards. Certain consultant companies have already produced and applied their own data.

have a dual role. During the actual measurement phase they also train company staff in the measurement techniques to enable the company to take over.

In the initial stages, analysis of historical data and activity sampling will facilitate a survey, which will identify the task and show potential scope for productivity increase. Subsequent analysis by predetermined time techniques often highlight job overlap, duplication, and show the areas where work simplification can be carried out to best advantage. The predetermined time system will establish an equitable and fair time in which the job should be completed.

The main advantages are that management gets the actual standard cost for the operation, a performance statement showing, on a percentage basis, the efficiency rating of each department (allowing for betterment in progress and interdepartment comparison), a list of standard times facilitating planning, scheduling and control, and written standard practices showing how the job is performed. Also it establishes that the job has been analysed and this enforces method study.

With the introduction of work measurement, staff reductions of 20 per cent are not unrealistic. Shortage of staff and non-replacement, rather than redundancy, usually takes care of this problem. In the best applications, employee morale is more often than not enhanced. Various firms are reporting to consultants a savings ratio of 5:1 in the first year of operation.

The Almighty Dollar

by R. ROBERT, A.C.I.S.

FOR its beginnings we have to go back as far as the sixteenth century, in the early years of which large silver mines were discovered in Bohemia and Tyrol and a massive silver coin known as the thaler was first struck. Its production coincided with a period of expanding trade in Europe, which necessitated larger and intrinsically more valuable coins, and it quickly achieved an international popularity. The Spanish peso, the French écu, the Italian scudo, and the Turkish piastre were all, originally, variants of the thaler. So, too, were the Dutch daler, the Danish rigsdaler, the Swedish riksdaler – and the American dollar.

Authority for the coining of dollars in the U.S.A. was given by an Act of Congress in 1792, which made it the official unit of account and placed it firmly on a decimal basis. The first silver dollars – not, however, struck until two years later – continued in circulation until 1904, when they were temporarily discontinued.

Gold dollars, which replaced the silver dollars as the standard of value in 1849, remained in circulation until 1890. The famous 'greenback' paper dollars, so-called from devices printed in green on the back, were issued during the Civil War in 1862. They were legal tender, but inconvertible, and therefore depreciated rapidly until worth only approximately one-third of their face value. Not until 1879, when specie payments were resumed, did this American paper money become convertible.

Various theories have been advanced to explain the origin of the dollar sign. One of the more likely is that it was derived from the symbol used in Spain and the Spanish-South American colonies to denote the peso, or piece of eight – i.e. the figure '8' with an oblique line on either side (/8/); it is conceivable that the '8' evolved over the years into an 'S' and the lines, hastily written, became superimposed upon it. How and where the term 'almighty dollar' arose, is also something of a mystery but it probably originated in America itself – for the American writer Washington Irving was using it in a humorous way well over a century ago. 'The Almighty Dollar,' he wrote in 1837, 'that great object of universal devotion in our land'. Today, of course, the devotion is world-wide; for the American dollar, despite recent events, is still pre-eminent in international finance.

Linked to gold

For reasons that remain obscure, mankind has always placed an exaggerated value on gold. The ancient Egyptians believed it had some mystical, life-giving property and sent expeditions far and wide in the search for it. From the time of the ancient Greeks onwards, nations have made their most valuable coins of gold. Even today, after all the questionings, gold continues to be regarded in certain quarters as a desirable, if not actually essential, basis for all paper currencies with any pretensions to respectability. The 'gnomes' appear to retain a high degree of faith in it; so do the central banks. President de Gaulle believed not so long ago — perhaps still believes — that its price, in terms of the dollar, should be doubled.

Under the law of 1792 the United States dollar was defined as being the equivalent of 24.75 grains of fine gold, or 371.25 grains of fine silver. Provision was made for the issue of a silver dollar with a slightly lower bullion content than the Spanish peso and for the issue of gold coins valued at $2\frac{1}{2}$, $5 and $10$. This bi-metallic system survived until 1873 when it was abandoned, and the U.S.A. adopted the gold standard. After 1873 anyone could exchange dollar notes across the bank counters for gold coin of like value.

That position was modified by new arrangements which came into force on January 31st, 1934, when the redemption of paper notes by means of gold coin was replaced by the United States Government buying and selling gold bullion at a fixed price. In practice, there was little to distinguish one arrangement from the other. The dollar note represented a specified and fixed quantity of gold. To ensure that this was so, in fact as well as theory, the Americans evolved a somewhat complex system of bullion reserves and the amount of those reserves determined the upper limit of the note circulation.

In an era when the backing for paper money tends increasingly to be related to the national productivity, all this sounds decidedly old-fashioned; yet so powerful is the mystique surrounding 'the precious yellow, non-rusting, ductile metal of high specific gravity' (as the dictionary defines it), that it made the dollar strong and kept it steady all through the years of tribulation when the pound, the mark, the franc, the lira, and the rouble were being consumed in the furnaces of war, revolution, and economic crisis.

Devaluations of the dollar

That is not to say, of course, that the dollar has been without its earlier troubles. The catastrophic devaluation caused by the Civil War and its aftermath has already been referred to above. In 1934 the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune had again to be endured. For over a hundred years - in fact, since 1837 - the content of the gold dollar had been reckoned at 24.75 grains, or more exactly 25.8 grains of 0.9 fine gold. This was reduced in 1934 to 15.5 grains of 0.9 fine gold and represented another quite drastic devaluation - for the price of fine gold was increased from $20.66 to $35 per ounce. To complete the package, gold coins were withdrawn from circulation and paper money became full legal tender. The changes were made necessary by the world slump of 1929-33, which reduced price levels in the United States by approximately a half.

On January 19th of this year came news that America was again on the verge of a major monetary reform. President Johnson, in his 'State of the Union' address to Congress, foreshadowed that there would be legislation to repeal the present gold cover for the United States currency. Twice already since the end of the Second World War, the legal minimum of gold backing for the dollar has been reduced. In both cases the move was dictated by the increasing volume of paper money in circulation – i.e. by inflationary trends.

At the time of the President's address the proportion of gold bullion stored away in the vaults of Fort Knox as a legal support for the currency was 25 per cent. In practice this meant that well over $10,000 million worth of gold had been immobilized underground – or approximately five-sixths of America's total gold reserves. Under the new legislation for which the President has asked, the law requiring a fixed proportion of gold to paper money will be repealed and the gold reserves thus released will be used, as and when required, to support the dollar abroad. Mr Johnson went out of his way to assure the world that there was a firm commitment to maintain the price of gold at $35 an ounce as hitherto, and at the time of writing, so far as inter-bank transactions are concerned, that remains the price. Under the two-tier plan, gold on the free market will be left to find its own level.

The domestic dollar has, therefore, at least partially broken out of its chains and Washington, it seems, has accepted that the mysterious power of gold is little more, as economists from Keynes onwards have contended, than a superstitious survival from the past, and an illusion. At the same time, since so much of the world still retains its blind faith in the 'aureate dust', its abandonment as a security for the paper currency, constantly growing bigger as in Britain, can hardly fail to be taken as at least an amber light in Zürich, Paris and many other places, notwithstanding that the huge reserves are now liberated for use on the international exchanges.

The 'Almighty Dollar' – with France waging a brisk war of nerves against it – seems to be running into grave and continuing difficulties and is already being openly referred to as the 'doomed dollar'. Whether that is a correct diagnosis or merely wishful thinking remains to be seen.

Dollar diplomacy

There is yet one term, often used in the past, that calls for a word of explanation. The phrase 'dollar diplomacy' was first used by President W. H. Taft in December 1912 during the course of a speech in which he said that 'the policy of substituting dollars for bullets is one that appeals to idealistic humanitarian sentiments, to the dictates of sound policy and strategy, and to legitimate commercial aims'. In plainer words: 'dollar diplomacy' was the policy of using America's immense financial power to dominate Central America and the Caribbean, and to promote the interests of American bankers and industrialists the world over. Where John Bull had acquired an empire by military might – or in fits of absent-mindedness – Uncle Sam's technique was economic penetration.

The policy, it may be said, was vigorously attacked for its chauvinistic implications and fell into disrepute. Nevertheless, it was later refurbished and pressed into service by Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, and F. D. Roosevelt with varying degrees of success.

When we look around and see the increasingly important role being played by American capital in British industry – and in the industries of so many other countries – we may well be forgiven for asking whether Lyndon B. Johnson is not its most able and thorough-going exponent? Certainly the policy, notwithstanding all the current vicissitudes of the dollar, is riding high.

Carfax Waste Paper Co Ltd v. Minister of Labour

In the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division) February 14th, 1968

Selective employment tax – Refund – Premium – Sorting and cleaning of waste paper – Sales to paper mills and board mills – Whether manufacturing of paper and board – Whether parallel or ancillary or connected activity – Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, sections 1, 10 (5) – Minimum list headings 481, 499, 832.

The company collected quantities of waste paper, some from dealers in waste paper and the remainder from large companies such as banks and insurance companies and from local authorities and schools. In 1966, about eight thousand tons of waste paper was dealt with in the company's establishment where the paper was cleaned and sorted through a dusting machine which extracted such items as pieces of tin and silver paper. The waste paper was then conveyed along a conveyor belt for hand sorting, where latex, glue bindings, tissues, bitumen papers and other items were extracted. Large sheets of paper had to be cut down in size and paper had to be torn out from bindings. During the manual sorting tests had to be applied in some instances to ascertain the nature of the paper or its constituents, and for this purpose acid tests and burning tests were employed. When ultimately sorted the paper was baled into grades. About thirty-two grades of paper were sold to paper mills and about twelve grades to board mills.

In 1962, the price obtained for a bale of clean and sorted paper was about twice the average price of the waste paper bought by the company.

The company contended that its activity was within minimum list heading 481, 'Manufacturing all types of paper and board', or under heading 499.2, 'All other manufacturing industries not elsewhere specified'.

The Industrial Tribunal decided that the company's activity did not fall under heading 481 nor under heading 499, in that the company did not manufacture paper or board nor manufactured at all, but merely adapted material for sale.

Held: the Tribunal's decision was correct.

Prestcold (Central) Ltd v. Minister of Labour

In the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division) February 21st, 1968

(Before The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Parker of Waddington), Mr Justice Ashworth and Mr Justice Willis)

Selective employment tax – Refund – Premium – Manufacture of coolers and suspension – Manufacture of cooling blankets – Making of refrigerating plant – Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, sections I, 2 – Minimum list headings 339, 349, 474, 500.

The company had an establishment at which it manufactured coolers and the brackets to suspend them from and also manufactured cooling blankets for human refrigeration in medical treatment. Those activities accounted for about 12½ per cent of the company's business, with two men fully employed on it, and the activities were admittedly manufacture. In addition the company made refrigerating plant of various kinds, and in this respect the company used parts made by other companies. Furthermore, the company provided cooling rooms at abattoirs, supermarkets, hospitals and other places. In this respect the company assembled and made the equipment after inspecting the places where it had to be installed. Again, the only part of the equipment made by the company was the cooler, and the electrical wiring and installation was carried out by other concerns.

It was contended for the company that the assembling of parts to form the whole of a refrigeration installation was the manufacture of the installation, and was within minimum list heading 339. It was contended for the Minister of Labour that the activity in question fell under minimum list heading 500 in that it was installation work. The Industrial Tribunal decided in favour of the Minister.

Held: the Tribunal's decision was correct.

Minister of Labour v. Wandex Plastics Ltd

Selective employment tax — Refund — Premium — Thermoplastic material — Sorting and selling to re-processors — Manufactured into pellets — Whether part of such manufacture — Whether dealing in scrap and waste material — Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, sections 1, 2, 10 (5) — Minimum list headings 276, 832.

The company's business consisted of buying waste materials from injection moulders and fabricators of thermoplastic material. The company sorted out and separated the waste materials into their proper classes. This process consisted partly of visual sorting and partly the applying of melting point tests, gravity tests and pencil tests for hardness and the like. The company sold the sorted materials by weight, and the turnover was about fifteen tons a week. The sales were to reprocessers and the material was packed in containers, with special linings, or in steel drums, or in cardboard cartons. As to 95 per cent of the material, it was exported either to Europe or to Hong Kong.

The reprocessers ground the material into powder and formed the powder into pellets, which are supplied to their customers for use in manufacturing plastic articles. It was stated that the activity of the reprocessers was under minimum list heading 276, 'Synthetic resins and plastic materials'.

It was contended for the company that its activity was an integral part of the manufacture of the pellets. The Industrial Tribunal decided by a majority in favour of the company, but the chairman held that the activity fell under minimum list heading 832.6 as being that of a dealer in scrap and waste material.

Held: the activity of the company was not part of the process of manufacturing the pellets, but was a process merely in connection with or preliminary to that process; and that it fell under minimum list heading 832.6.

George Wimpey & Co Ltd v. Minister of Labour

(Before The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Parker of Waddington, Lord Justice Winn and Mr Justice Ashworth)

Selective employment tax – Refund – Premium – Building company – Special process for moulding walls of houses – By gangs going from site to site – Whether an establishment – Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, sections 1, 2, 10 (3) – Minimum list headings 469, 500.

The company carried on the activity of building houses, and it had developed a system called the 'Nc fines system', whereby it erected on the site the walls of houses by pouring into a mould concrete consisting of cement and aggregate, none of which was fine. This activity was carried out by gangs of about ten men under a foreman, who would go from site to site with their own equipment. They were separate from the ordinary building workers on the site. While the gang in question was working on a site the other erection work on the site ceased, and was resumed when they moved on. On the building site in question there were seventy men employed on the ordinary building as well as the special gang of ten men.

It was contended for the company that the establishment on the building site was separate from the building site itself, and that the seventy men employed in general building were part of a separate establishment. It was contended further that the activity carried on by the special gang was the making of a substance under minimum list heading 469.2, 'Bricks, pottery, glass, cement, etc. 'It was contended for the Minister that the activity fell under heading 500, 'Construction'. The Industrial Tribunal decided in favour of the Minister.

Held: the Tribunal's decision was correct.

Hay's International Services London Ltd v. Minister of Labour

(Before The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Parker of Waddington), Mr Justice Ashworth and Mr Justice Willis)

Selective employment tax – Refund – Premium – Several activities – Whether more than half the employees connected with the activities – Selective Employment Payments Act 1966, sections I, 2 – Minimum list headings 334, 349, 38I, 4I4, 482, 499, 709.

The company carried on a number of activities, and the total number of persons employed wholly or mainly in connection with those activities was 414. One of the activities was the assembly of industrial tractors, and twenty-nine people were thus employed wholly or mainly. The second activity was the manufacture of cardboard cartons, on which forty-eight persons were employed. The third activity on which 101 persons were employed, was the dismantling and testing of agricultural tractors, and the replacing of defective parts and the packing of tractors. The fourth activity was the testing, repairing and correcting faults in internal combustion engines and diesel engines, and fifty-eight persons were thus employed.

These activities, except the third, were conceded to be qualifying activities, and these three activities employed 135 out of the 414 employees at the establishment.

The dispute centred on the third activity in connection with which about 101 persons were employed. In that activity the company received the tractors from the Ford Motor Co Ltd and the first thing done by the company to a vehicle was to check to see if it was complete. Sometimes a part was missing and the company replaced it. The tractors arrived with slave wheels, which were removed. The company dealt with about ten thousand tractors a year, and in 3 per cent of the cases the customers would be in Asia and would wish to work on the rice fields, and the company would make wooden wheels for the tractors.

Until instructions for export were received, the tractors would be stored; and when instructions were received, the company would test the engine, inject it with anti-corrosive fluid and cover the painting with non-corroding paint. Packing cases would then be built round the tractor, and the tractor and its case would be sent off for shipment.

It was contended that these activities with agricultural tractors came under minimum list heading 381, 'Motor vehicle manufacture' or, alternatively, under heading 349.3, 'Other mechanical engineering, general sub-contract work'. The basis of the latter contention was that the company was a general sub-contractor to the Ford company to put tractors into a fit state for export to meet customers' requirements. It was also contended, in the further alternative, that this activity fell under heading 499.2, 'All other manufacturing industries not elsewhere specified'. It was contended for the Minister of Labour that these activities fell under heading 709.1, 'Services incidental to transport'.

The Industrial Tribunal decided in favour of the Minister.

Held: the case should be remitted to the Tribunal to determine whether the company's activities relating to agricultural tractors were a part of the process of manufacturing such tractors.

Trust Houses

AXATION dominates the accounts of Trust Houses Ltd from which this week's reprint is taken. The crucial taxation point is the change from a renewals basis to a capital allowances tax basis and the result of the change is shown in Note 2 to the group profit and loss account.

Naturally, Sir Geoffrey Crowther, the chairman, enlarges on the subject in his statement to shareholders. The company, he tells them, had been negotiating the change in treatment for some time and 'reached agreement with the Inspector on the principle of this change some time ago'.

The necessary calculations, however, were 'mountainous' and it was agreed that the change, when finally determined, would be applied restrospectively to the 1962-63 financial year and to all subsequent years.

Assessments in respect of the financial years 1962-63 to 1965-66 have been reduced and the company is entitled to a cash repayment of £529,700 for those years. That sum plus other tax reserves, no longer required, make up the £667,923 total. Corporation tax assessment on Trust Houses Ltd in respect of 1966-67 will be nil and, in addition, there are 'sufficient allowances available to offset, through the "grouping" provisions of the law, the assessments of the other hotel companies in the United Kingdom'. That explains the low tax figure in the latest accounts.

Reserve review

In future years, allowances arising in those years will reduce assessments and there is a 'very large sum of unavailed allowances carried forward'. Corporation tax assessments in the hotel companies should be 'low, or very low, for some time to come'. For that reason it is not at present considered necessary to establish a reserve for deferred taxation in respect of the adjustments made. The position will be reviewed year by year.

Sir Geoffrey puts on record the board's 'gratitude to the Inspector of Taxes for his patience and understanding and to the taxation department of the auditors, Price Waterhouse & Co, for their assistance and advice'. But he thanks 'most of all' the group chief accountant, Mr M. O. Wright, F.C.A., his predecessor (now retired) Mr N. C. Nicholson, F.C.A., and their staffs 'for the very great volume of work that has een entailed'.

But Sir Geoffrey emphasizes that corporation tax is only one of the taxes the group has to pay. In future it is proposed to provide information in the annual report on the total of all taxes and compulsory charges as well as of 'taxation' in the specific sense of the Companies Act. The total of all taxation borne by the company and its shareholders has increased from 1965 to 1967 by 86 per cent. From taking 47 per cent of operating profit it has risen to 76 per cent.

Tax weight

Taxation in this context includes, over the period, income tax (Schedules D and F) profits tax, corporation tax, capital gains tax, overseas taxes on profits, employers' contributions, redundancy payments (net), selective employment tax, rates, Road Fund licences, liquor licences, stamp duties and Irish turnover tax. No account has been taken of excise duties for which the group acts as unpaid collector from the public.

This tax weight, Sir Geoffrey says, has meant that what is in fact a progressive and expanding company as measured by its profit before taxation, has been made to appear a stagnating or receding one as measured by the amount left over for allocation to reserves or for distribution to shareholders. Over the three years in question the 'operating profit' after depreciation and maintenance expenditure but before charging interest and any of the taxation mentioned in the above list has risen from £3.1 million to £4.4 million.

The figure conventionally known as 'profit before tax' should, Sir Geoffrey considers, be more accurately named 'profit after many other taxes but before corporation tax'. The conventional 'pre-tax' profit, he considers, is 'of very doubtful relevance'

Technical difficulties have prevented the provision of detailed tax figures in the latest report but Sir Geoffrey hopes that the difficulties can be surmounted in future years. The position, however, is shown in diagram form.

Reorganization

Following a report by McKinsey & Co, the board of Trust Houses has completed its review of the management structure of the group. The seven London hotels are being grouped in a wholly-owned subsidiary, Westminster Hotels Ltd. The rest of the hotel group is divided into three other operating subsidiaries - Trust House Hotels Ltd, responsible for all other U.K. Hotels, Trust Houses Overseas Ltd and Trust Houses International Ltd.

The central services of the group will be organized in six service divisions - personnel, marketing, supplies, financial, administrative and technical. The parent company is to become purely a holding company and will change its name to Trust Houses Group Ltd. All the hotel properties will be conveyed to a wholly-owned subsidiary, which will take the name of Trust Houses Ltd and will be the trading company of the group on the hotel side.

The other main trading subsidiary will be Gardner Merchant Ltd, 66 per cent owned by Trust Houses Group Ltd, which will be responsible for all the non-hotel catering activities. Trust Houses was formed in 1903 'to revive the tradition of English innkeeping'. The 110,000 trust shares of the company are held by trustees on behalf of the 'Council' and entitle the Council to the same number of votes as all the holders of the other shares of the company. The Council therefore has voting power capable of ensuring that the company's objects are maintained. It also has the duty of distributing the income from the trust shares for charitable purposes.

CITY NOTES

STOCK-markets have translated the Budget in the way that stock-markets now apparently translate any event—into higher prices. Reaction to the Budget in stock-market terms is well reasoned since the impact of the Chancellor's measures in terms of drawn off purchasing power will not be felt for some considerable time, and industry has had a decidedly good run since devaluation.

Industrial earnings this year should be buoyant and, in an equity market based on earnings rather than on dividends, the fact of dividend limitation hardly matters. Reduction in Bank rate by half a point has allowed the giltedged market to 'get into the act' although it may be some time before Bank rate can justifiably be moved again. It is fair to assume, however, that Bank rate would have come down before now had not the Government taken such a terrifyingly long time to put into economic operation the plans that were supposed to have been at the ready last November.

In equity terms, the Budget can be assessed on the basis that it will only succeed in its object if prices are allowed to rise faster than wages and internal demand is thereby reduced. It remains to be seen whether legislation on wages, rather than on prices, will do the economic trick or whether legislation against wage increases will only mean a series of strikes and loss of export production and orders.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Controlling Wages

SIR, – The present difficulties which we are experiencing in relation to wages seem to me to arise from a fundamentally inappropriate method of control.

The difficulty is that the trade unions, quite rightly, have a defensive role to play in ensuring that their members achieve minimum rates of pay. At the same time the country requires them to play a positive role in relating pay rises to productivity improvements.

Blanket agreement of rises in rates of pay are sought by the unions but are naturally resisted nationally because there is no guarantee of productivity rises.

My suggestion is that the Government should leave the unions and employers free to negotiate wage rates for the coming period. Government should then require all employers to restrain their total wages bill to the amount paid in the last accounting year unless they can show that a real improvement in sales performance has taken place. This policy could be built into the existing system of reporting sales, costs and profits to the Inland Revenue for normal tax purposes.

The advantages to be gained are considerable:

First, actual sales in £s could be adjusted to take account of any purely inflationary increase, since the rate would be known retrospectively.

Secondly, no employer will be prevented from paying higher wage rates if productivity improved since he would have available the wages fund previously paid to a larger labour force.

Thirdly, no employer would be prevented from paying more wages as a result of increased business or exports.

Fourthly, the present formal negotiating structure would be left intact although its use as an instrument of planning would be circumvented.

For enforcement, the policy requires a penalty. This should be tax on any excess wages paid, perhaps on a f for f basis.

A further advantage of the system is that it would be compatible with a shift towards an added-value tax system, if the Government should decide to make this at a later date.

Yours faithfully,
DOUGLAS GARBUTT,

Simplifying Taxes

SIR, – It is gratifying that the professional accounting bodies are at last beginning to realize how impossibly complicated the tax system has become.

The main reason for complication in the system of taxing profits and incomes is the progressive structure of personal income taxation.

The high rates of tax lead to efforts at avoidance which provoke complicated anti-avoidance provisions (often retrospective); and the progressive structure itself means

Four Residential Courses on Current Tax Practice were held this week by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton. Among the subjects covered were corporation tax – including shortfalls, and groups and 'related' companies – capital gains tax and tax planning. Some of the members who took part are pictured above. Top picture, left to right: Mr M. Barradell, LL.B., F.C.A., an Assistant Secretary of the Institute; Mr D. F. Dodd, T.D., F.C.A., a course director; Mr N. R. that income must be allocated accurately between individuals and between time periods.

The solution is really very simple: abolish surtax, merge corporation tax with income tax, and scrap the artificial distinction between 'earned' and 'unearned' income.

With this proposed system, and with a single flat-rate tax of 6s 8d in the £ on all incomes, all the close company provisions could be scrapped and the whole tax system immensely simplified – and with NO loss of gross tax revenue.

Courses and Conferences 1968

WE refer below to courses and conferences which have been arranged by accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom over the next eight months. The feature this year has been extended to provide a fuller coverage of the courses in view of the greater number and variety of subjects which the various accountancy bodies are now including in their post-qualification training programmes. Except where otherwise stated, members of kindred accountancy bodies, as well as non-accountants when sponsored by members, may attend the courses.

THE INSTITUTE OF COST AND WORKS ACCOUNTANTS
Week-end Residential Conference at Keele University

A CONFERENCE under the title 'management information systems', for members of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and their business colleagues is being held by the Institute's West Midlands Area Co-ordinating Committee this week-end.

The end-product of the conference will be a report on management information systems. Introductory talks on the subject were given yesterday, and today the first task of the conference is being undertaken by syndicates whose discussions will concentrate on specific aspects of the conference theme. Final conclusions reached in plenary sessions will form the basis of the report, serving as a contribution to the technical work programme of the Institute.

April 5th-7th

Week-end Residential Course at Oxford

THE No. 1 Area Co-ordinating Committee of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants is holding a members' residential course at Oriel College, Oxford, from April 5th to 7th on 'The management accountant in the seventies'.

Those attending the course will briefly discuss management accounting techniques currently used in four broadly differing types of industry and then deal with the probable lines of improved or new techniques over the next ten years. Areas selected for discussion are: light engineering, public utilities, flow line production, and processing. Members engaged in the various industries who will give introductory talks leading to discussion periods are: Mr P. E. Randall, F.C.W.A., Standard Telephones & Cables Ltd; Mr A. Hodson, F.C.W.A., and Mr T. P. Bolam, A.C.W.A., both of the Midlands Electricity Board; Mr B. Overson, A.C.W.A., and Mr B. J. Foulks, A.C.W.A., both of the British Motor Corporation; Mr R. V. Denby, F.C.W.A., British Bakeries Ltd, and Mr C. W. Banyard, B.SC., A.C.W.A., Esso Chemicals Ltd.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Residential Office Efficiency Course at Buxton

NEW course entitled 'Efficiency in the office' is to be held by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales from April 26th to 30th at the Palace Hotel, Buxton.

This four-day residential course, which has been prepared for the Institute by Binder, Hamlyn, Fry & Co, will enable those attending to learn from expert speakers and in practical sessions the techniques and skills of getting the best from staffs and systems, controlling work and improving methods. Subjects covered will include: 'Control and standards'; 'Finding facts by interview', and 'Practical steps in implementing improvements'. Practical work will include exercises on charting a system, form design, and office layout, together with case studies on the introduction and improvement of a new system and on overcoming resistance to change.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS OF SCOTLAND Residential Course on Management Performance at Glasgow

ACOURSE under the title 'The management performance gap' has been arranged by The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland at the St Enoch Hotel, Glasgow, from May 2nd to 3rd.

The object of the course is to provide an opportunity for those attending to discuss through group and plenary sessions the problems which have to be solved by companies faced with a gap between management's present capabilities and future company objectives. It should be of particular value to those with the task of building a management team whether in industry, practice or consultancy.

PLEA FOR TAX SIMPLIFICATION

Speaking at the fourth annual dinner of the Hereford Group of Chartered Accountants on Friday of last week, Sir Clive Bossom, Conservative Member of Parliament for Leominster, said that grim as the Budget was, the accountancy profession would greet with relief the fact that no major new tax was added to the already complicated fiscal structure — although the Chancellor made some threatening noises about a 'value added' tax being discarded, apparently, only for the time being.

'It may be a little early – but I think the earlier the better – to endorse the proposals put forward by Mr W. E. Parker, President of the Institute, in his letter of February 9th. In that letter he asked the Chancellor for three positive steps to sort out the tax chaos. He asked for a select committee of Parliament to undertake the work of rationalizing and integrating the whole fiscal structure; he asked for an earlier publication of the text of major Bills introducing new fiscal measures and, finally, for a further committee of Parliament to examine new measures.'

The object, said Sir Clive, is obviously to enable experts such as yourselves to help avoid the welter of half-baked legislation and consequent amendments recently experienced and, more basically, to remove the anomalies and the injustices which a ramshackle system over one hundred years old now imposes.

MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION GROUP

NEW 12th EDITION READY APRIL 16th, 1968

CUTFORTH'S AUDITS

by ALFRED PALMER, F.C.A., and J. C. CRAWFORD, B.Com., C.A.

For over sixty years Cutforth's Audits has been foremost in its field and the Accountancy student's traditional textbook. On the sound foundation laid by Sir Arthur Cutforth, the present editors have revised and brought up to date this Twelfth Edition. Account is taken of the provisions of the Companies Act 1967 and latest developments in Audit practice. A valuable feature is the inclusion of over fifty typical examination questions on Auditing which are fully discussed and answered.
